1. A will; any writing directing the disposal of the possessions of a man deceased.

He bringeth arguments from the love which always the testator bore him, imagining that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it which other men can no where by reading find. Hooker.

All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,
Would they strip from us. Shakspeare.

He ordained by his last testament, that his Aeneids should be burnt. Dryden.

2. The name of each of the volumes of the holy scripture.

TESTAMENTARY. adj. [testamentaire, Fr. testamentarius, Lat.] Given by will;
contained in wills.

How many testamentary charities have been defeated by the negligence or fraud of executors; by the suppression of a will; the subordination of witnesses, or the corrupt sentence of a judge! Atterbury.

TE'STATE. adj. [testatus, Lat.] Having made a will.

By the canon law, the bishop had the lawful distribution of the goods of persons dying testate and

the groins and testicles. Wise.

TESTIFICATION. n. f. [testificatio, Lat, from testify.] The act of witnessing.

When together we have all received those heavenly mysteries wherein Christ imparteth himself unto us, and giveth visible testimony of our blessed communion with him, we should, in hatred of all heresies, factions, and schisms, declare openly ourselves united. Hooker.

In places solemnly dedicated for that purpose, is a more direct service and testimony of our homage to God. South.

TESTIFICA'TOR. n. f. [from testificor,

peevishly; morosely.

TESTIMONIAL. n. f. [testimonial, Fr.
testimonium, Lat.] A writing produced by any one as an evidence for himself.

Hospitable people entertain all the idle vagrant reports, and send them out with passports and testimonials, and will have them pass for legitimate. Government of the Tongue.

It is possible to have such testimonials of divine authority as may be sufficient to convince the more reasonable part of mankind, and pray what is wanting in the testimonies of Jesus Christ? Burnet.

A clerk does not exhibit to the bishop letters missive or testimonial, testifying his good behaviour. Ayliffe.

TE'STIMONY. n. f. [testimonium, Lat.]

1. Evidence given; proof by witness.

The proof of every thing must be by the testimony of such as the parties produce. Spenser.

If I bring you sufficient testimony, my ten thousand ducats are mine. Shakspeare.

Evidence is said to arise from testimony, when we depend upon the credit and relation of others for the truth or falsehood of any thing. Wilkins.

I could not answer it to the world, if I gave not your lordship my testimony of being the best husband. Dryden.

I must bear this testimony of Otway's memory, that the passions are truly touched in his Venice Preserved. Dryden.

2. Public evidences.

We maintain the uniform testimony and tradition of the primitive church. White.

Than when before your feet I lay;

But to prevent the sad increase

Of hopeless love, I keep away.

Waller.

Forgive me that I thus your patience wrong.

Cowley.

2. Noting a consequence.

That he should dare to do me this disgrace!

Is fool or coward writ upon my face?

Dryden.

The custom and familiarity of these tongues do sometimes so far influence the expressions in these epistles, that one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations.

Locke.

3. Noting indication.

We answered, that we held it so agreeable, as we both forgot dangers past, and fears to come, that we thought an hour spent with him was worth years of our former life.

Bacon.

In the midst of this darkness they saw so much light, as to believe that when they died they went immediately to the stars.

Heylin.

I have shewed before, that a mere possibility to the contrary can by no means hinder a thing from being highly credible.

Wilkins.

4. Noting a final end.

Treat it kindly, that it may

With at least with us to stay.

Cowley.

THATCH. n. f. [ðace, Sax. straw, Skinner, from ðac, a roof; in Islandick, thak, Mr. Lye.] Straw laid upon the top of a house to keep out the weather.

Hard by a sty, beneath a roof of thatch

Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days

Baskets of fish at Billingsgate did watch,

Cod, whiting, oyster, mackrel, sprat, or plaice.

A plough-boy, who has never seen any thing but thatched houses, naturally imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house.

Then came rosy health from her cottage of thatch,

Where never physician had lifted the latch.

Smart.

To THATCH. v. a. [ðaccian, Sax.] To cover as with straw.

Make false hair, and thatch

Your poor thin roofs with burthens of the dead.

Shakspeare.

Moss groweth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched.

Bacon.

Then Rome was poor, and there you might behold

The palace thatch'd with straw.

Dryden.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris

Might raise a house above two stories:

A lyric ode would state, a catch

Would tile, an epigram would thatch.

Swift.

THATCHER. n. f. [from thatch.] One whose trade is to cover houses with straw.

You merit new employments daily;

Our thatcher, ditcher, gard'ner, baily.

Swift.

Ash is universal timber; it serves the soldier, seaman, carpenter, thatcher, and husbandman.

Mortimer.

To THAW. v. n. [ðapan, Saxon; degen, Dutch.]

1. To grow liquid after congelation; to melt.

THE

When thy melted maid
His letter at thy pillow hath laid;
If thou begin'st to thaw for this,
May my name step in. Donne.

It on firm land
Thaws not, but gathers heap, and ruin seems
Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice. Milton.

Having let that ice thaw of itself, and frozen the Liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing. Boyle.

O Solitude! romantick maid,
Whether by nodding tow'rs you tread,
Or climb the Andes' clifted side,
Or by the Nile's coy source abide,
Or, starting from a half year's sleep,
From Hecla view the thawing deep,
Or Tadmor's marble wastes survey,
Or in yon roofless cloister play;
Thee, fond nymph! again I woo,
And again thy steps pursue. Grainger.

2. To remit the cold which had caused frost.

To THAW. v. a. To melt what was con-gealed.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the isles. Shakspeare.

Think not that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth fools. Shakspeare.

My love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was. Shakspeare.

She can unlock
The clasping charm, and thaw the numbing spell. Milton.

Burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden.

Her icy heart is thaw'd. Granville.

THAW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Liquefaction of any thing congealed.

A man of my kidney, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakspeare.

Hardens his stubborn heart, but still as ice
More harden'd after thaw. Milton.

2. Warmth such as liquifies congelation.

I was the prince's jester, and duller than a great thaw. Shakspeare.

That cold country where discourse doth freeze in the air all winter, and may be heard in the next summer, or at a great thaw. Wilkins.

When sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,
A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rain,
First the tender blade peeps. Dryden.

THE. article. [de, Dutch.]

1. The article noting a particular thing.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt:
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he dy'd. Shakspeare.

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bed-chamber, for the which he could not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promise. Clarendon.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

I'll march the muses, Hannibal.
The fair example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark;
Above the stars let thy bold musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world.
Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie,
All but the mournful Philomel and I. Pope.

2. Before a vowel e is commonly cut off in verse.

Who had th' especial engines been to rear
His fortunes up into the state they were. Daniel.

THE

Th' adorning thee with so much art
Is but a barb'rous skill:

'Tis like the pois'ning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill. Cowley.

3. Sometimes be is cut off.
In this scale gold, in t' other fame does lie. Cowley.

4. It is used by way of consequential reference.

The longer sin hath kept possession of the heart,
the harder it will be to drive it out. Duty of Man.

5. In the following passage the is used according to the French idiom.

As all the considerable governments among the Alps are commonwealths, so it is a constitution the most adapted of any to the poverty of these countries. Addison.

Lat.] Belonging to a theatre.

THEATRE. n. f. [theatre, Fr. theatrum,
Latin.]

1. A place in which shows are exhibited; a playhouse.

This wise and universal theatre
Presents more woful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play. Shakspeare.

When the boats came within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, yet so as they might go about, so as they all stood as in a theatre beholding this light. Bacon.

2. A place rising by steps or gradations like a theatre.

Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton.

In the midst of this fair valley stood
A native theatre, which, rising slow,
By just degrees, o'erlook'd the ground below. Dryden.

No theatres of oaks around him rise, Whose roots earth's centre touch, whose heads the skies. Harte.

THEATRICAL. } adj. [theatrum, Latin.]

THEATRICK. } Scenick; suiting a theatre; pertaining to a theatre.

Theatrical forms stickle hard for the prize of religion: a distorted countenance is made the mark of an upright heart. Decay of Piety.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state,
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate. Pope.

THEATRICKALLY. adv. [from theatrical.]

In a manner suiting the stage.
Dauntless her look, her gesture proud,

THEE. The oblique singular of thou.

Poet and saint, to thee alone were giv'n
The two most sacred names of earth and heav'n. Cowley.

THEFT. n. f. [from thief.]

1. The act of stealing.

Theft is an unlawful felonious taking away of another man's goods against the owner's knowledge or will. Cowell.

His thefts were too open; his filching was like an unskillful singer, he kept not time. Shakspeare.

Their nurse Euriphile, Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children. Shakspeare.

Deceit in trade, a secret theft: extortion, an impudent theft. Holyday.

The thefts upon the publick can be looked into and punished. Davenant.

2. The thing stolen.

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether ox, ass, or sheep, he shall restore double. Exodus.

THEIR. pronoun. [ðeora, of them, Sax.]

1. Of them: the pronoun possessive, from they.

The round world should have shook Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens. Shakspeare.

For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccace, who likewise received no little help from his master Petrarch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccace. Dryden.

2. Theirs is used when any thing comes in construction between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow,
and they never in theirs to refuse. Hooker.

They gave the same names to their own idols which the Egyptians did to theirs. Raleigh.

The penalty to thy transgression due,
And due to theirs, which out of thine will grow. Milton.

Nothing but the name of zeal appears
'Twixt our best actions and the worst of theirs. Denham.

Vain are our neighbours hopes, and vain their cares;
The fault is more their language's than theirs. Roscommon.

Which established law of theirs seems too strict at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues. Dryden.

And, reading, with like theirs our fate and fame. Pope.

THEM. The oblique of they.

The materials of them were not from any herb. Wilkins.

THEME. n. f. [theme, Fr. from θέμα.]

1. A subject on which one speaks or writes.

Every object of our idea is called a theme, whether it be a being or not being. Watts.

Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme. Shakspeare.

When a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off. Shakspeare.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as it is my theme:
Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;

Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full. Denham.

Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,
With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme. Roscommon.

Though Tyber's streams immortal Rome behold,
Though foaming Hermus swells with tides of gold;
From heav'n itself though seven-fold Nilus flows,
And harvests on a hundred realms bestows;
These now no more shall be the muse's themes,
Lost in my fame, as in the sea their streams. Pope.

2. A short dissertation written by boys on any topic.

Forcing the empty wits of children to compose themes, verses, and orations. Milton.

3. The original word whence others are derived.

Let scholars daily reduce the words to their original or theme, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs. Watts.

THEMSELVES. n. f. [See THEY and SELF.]

1. These very persons: in this sense it is nominative.

Whatsoever evil befalleth in that, themselves have made themselves worthy to suffer it. Hooker.

2. The oblique case of they and selves.

They open to themselves at length the way. Milton.

Such things as in themselves are equally true and certain, may not yet be capable of the same kind or degree of evidence as to us. Wilkins.

Waken children out of sleep with a low call, and give them kind usage till they come perfectly to themselves. Locke.

THEN. adv. [than, Gothick; ðan, Saxon; dan, Dutch.]

1. At that time.

The then bishop of London, Dr. Laud, attended on his majesty throughout that whole journey. Clarendon.

Thee, then a boy, within my arms I laid. Dryden.

2. Afterward; immediately afterward;
soon afterward.

If an herb be cut off from the roots in winter, and then the earth be trodden down hard, the roots will become very big in summer. Bacon.

3. In that case; in consequence.

If God's immediate speaking and writing argueth precepts, thus spoken or written, to be perpetually moral; then his not writing of precepts argueth them to be temporary. White.

Had not men been fated to be blind,
Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood. Dryden.

Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,
And then without a crime the crown had worn. Dryden.

If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.

4. Therefore; for this reason.

Whiles then the apostle moves us to unity, and moves us also to an endeavour to it, he bestows upon us as well a discovery, as an exhortation, shewing us not only the end, but also the means. Holyday.

If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good. Milton.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,
Thy jealousies and fears; and, while you may,
To peace and soft repose give all the day. Dryden.

5. At another time: as now and then, at one time and other.

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars. Milton.

One while the master is not aware of what is done, and then in other cases it may fall out to be his own act. L'Estrange.

6. That time: it has here the effect of a noun.

Till then who knew
The force of those dire arms? Milton.

THENCE. adv. [contracted, according to Minshew, from there hence.]

Fast by the oracle of God; I thence Invoke thy aid. Milton.

Surat he took, and thence preventing fame,
By quick and painful marches thither came. Dryden.

2. From that time.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days. Isaiab.

3. For that reason.

Not to sit idle with so great a gift
Useless, and thence ridiculous, about him. Milton.

4. From thence is a barbarous expression, thence implying the same; yet it wants not good authorities.

From thence; from him, whose daughter
His tears proclaim'd his parting with her; thence
We have cross'd. Shakspeare.

There plant eyes, all mist from thence Purge and disperse. Milton.

THENCEFORTH. adv. [thence and forth.]

1. From that time.

Thenceforth this land was tributary made
T' ambitious Rome. Spenser.

They shall be placed in Leinster, and have land given them to live upon, in such sort as shall become good subjects, to labour thenceforth for their living. Spenser.

2. From thenceforth is a barbarous corruption, though it has crept into books where it ought not to be found.

Wrath shall be no more Thenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire. Milton.

His holy eyes; resolving from thenceforth
To leave them to their own polluted ways. Milton.

Men grow acquainted with these self-evident truths upon their being proposed; but whosoever does so, finds in himself that he then begins to know a proposition which he knew not before, and which from thenceforth he never questions. Locke.

THENCEFORWARD. adv. [thence and forward.] On from that time.

When he comes to the Lord's table, every com-municant professes to repent, and promises to lead a new life thenceforward. Kettlewell.

THE'OLOGUE. } divine; one studious in the science of divinity.

The cardinals of Rome, which are theologues, friars, and schoolmen, call all temporal business, of wars, embassages, thirery, which is under their offices. Bacon.

A theologue more by need than genial bent;
Int'rest in all his actions was discern'd. Dryden.

It is no more an order, according to popish theologists, than the prima tonsura, they allowing only seven ecclesiastical theologists. Ayliffe.

THEOLOGY. n. f. [theologie, Fr. θεολογία.] Divinity.

The whole drift of the scripture of God, what is it but only to teach theology? Theology, what is it but the science of things divine? Hooker.

She was most dear to the king in regard of her knowledge in languages, in theology, and in philosophy. Hayward.

The oldest writers of theology were of this mind. Tillotson.

Upon a bough, to ease the pain

THEOREM. n. f. [theoreme, Fr. θεωρημα.]
A position laid down as an acknowledged truth.

Having found this the head theorem of all their discourses, who plead for the change of ecclesiastical government in England, we hold it necessary that the proofs thereof be weighed. Hooker.

The chief points of morality are no less demonstrable than mathematics; nor is the subtilty greater in moral theorems than in mathematical. More.

Many observations go to the making up of one theorem, which, like oaks fit for durable buildings, must be of many years growth. Graunt.

3. An exclamation directing something at a distance.

Your fury hardens me.
A guard there; seize her.

Dryden.

4. It is used at the beginning of a sentence with the appearance of a nominative case, but serves only to throw the nominative behind the verb: as, a man came, or there came a man. It adds however some emphasis, which, like many other idioms in every language, must be learned by custom, and can hardly be explained. It cannot always be omitted without harshness: as, in old times there was a great king.

For reformation of error there were that thought it a part of christian charity to instruct them.

Hooker.

There are delivered in holy scripture many weighty arguments for this doctrine.

White.

There cannot in nature be a strength so great, as to make the least moveable to pass in an instant, or all together, through the least place.

The combat thickens, like the storm that flies
From westward when the show'ry scuds arise,
Or patt'ring hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter descends in harden'd rain. Addison.
THICKET. n. f. [diccetun, Saxon.] A close knot or tuft of trees; a close wood or copse.

I drew you hither,
Into the chiefest thicket of the park. Shakspeare.
Within a thicket I repos'd; and found
Let fall from heav'n a sleep interminate. Chapman.

Thus, or any of his, could not in haste creep through those desert regions, which the length of one hundred and thirty years after the flood had fortified with thickets, and permitted every bush and briar, reed and tree, to join themselves into one main body and forest. Raleigh.

How often, from the steep
Of echoing hill, or thicket, have we heard
Celestial voices, to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive, each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator! Milton.

My brothers slept to the next thicket side
To bring me berries. Milton.

Now Leda's twins
Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe;
Nor had they mis'd, but he to thickets fled Conceal'd from aiming spears, not p'vious to the steed. Dryden.

I've known young Juba rise before the sun,
To beat the thicket where the tyger slept,
Or seek the lion in his dreadful haunts. Addison.

THICKLY. adv. [from thick.]

1. Deeply; to a great quantity.

Mending cracked receivers, having thickly overlaid them with diachylon, we could not perceive leaks. Boyle.

1. The state of being thick; density.

2. Quantity of matter interposed; space taken up by matter interposed.

In the darkened room, against the hole at which the light entered, I could easily see through the whole thickness of my hand the motions of a body placed beyond it. Boyle.

3. Quantity laid on quantity to some considerable depth.

Poll a tree, and cover it some thickness with clay on the top, and see what it will put forth. Bacon.

4. Consistence; grossness; not rareness;
spissitude.

Nitre mingled with water to the thickness of honey, and anointed on the bud after the vine is cut, it will sprout forth. Bacon.

Diseases imagined to come from the thickness of blood, come often from the contrary cause. Arbutnot.

5. Imperviousness; closeness.

The banks of the river and the thickness of the shades drew into them all the birds of the country. Addison.

6. Want of sharpness; want of quickness.

A person found in himself, being at some times subject to a thickness of hearing, the like effect.

What you write is printed in large letters; otherwise, between the weakness of my eyes and thickness of hearing, I should lose the greatest pleasure. Swift.

THICKSCULLED. adj. Dull; stupid.

They're pleas'd to hear their thick-scul'd judges cry,

Well mov'd! oh finely said! Dryden.

This downright fighting fool, this thick-scul'd hero,

This blunt unthinking instrument of death,
With plain dull virtue has outgone my wit. Dryd.

THICKSET. adj. [thick and set.] Close planted.

His eye-balls glare with fire, suffus'd with blood,
His neck shoots up a thickset thorny wood;
His bristled back a trench impal'd appears,
And stands erected like a field of spears. Dryden.

The world is so thickset with the numerous productions of the creatures, that besides the apparent beauty of things viewed by all, there are those secret graces in every part of nature, which some few alone have the skill to discern. Grew.

THICKSKIN. n. f. [thick and skin.] A coarse gross man; a numskull.

The shallow'st thickskin of that barren fort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his scene, and enter'd in a brake. Shaksp.

THIEF. n. f. [thiubs, Gothick; ðief, Saxon; dief, Dutch.] It was anciently written thieof, and so appears to have been of two syllables: thie was wont to be taken for thrift; so that thie of is he that takes of or from a man his thie, that is, his thrift or means whereby he thrives.]

1. One who takes what belongs to another:
the thief steals by secrecy, and the robber
by violence; but these senses are confounded.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night. Shakspeare.

This he said because he was a thief, and had the bag. John.

Can you think I owe a thief my life,
Because he took it not by lawless force?
Am I oblig'd by that t' assist his rapines,
And to maintain his murders? Dryden.

2. An excrescence in the snuff of a candle.
Their burning lamps the storm ensuing show,
Th' oil sparkles, thieves about the snuff do grow. May.

THIEF-CATCHER. n. f. [thief, and catch,
THIEF-LEADER. lead, take.] One

THIEF-TAKER. } whose business is to detect thieves, and bring them to justice.

A wolf pass'd by as the thief-leaders were dragging a fox to execution. L'Estrange.

My ev'nings all I would with sharpeners spend,
And make the thief-catcher my bosom friend. Bramston.

To THIEVE. v. n. [from thief.] To steal;
to practise theft.

THIEVERY. n. f. [from thieve.]

1. The practice of stealing; theft.

Ne how to 'scape great punishment and shame,
For their false treason and vile thievery. Spenser.
Do villany, do, since you profess to do't,
Like workmen; I'll example you with thievery. Shakspeare.

He makes it a help unto thievery; for thieves having a design upon a house, make a fire at the four corners thereof, and cast therein the fragments of loadstone, which raiseth fume. Brown.

Amongst the Spartans, thievery was a practice morally good and honest. South.

2. That which is stolen.

Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Crams his rich thiev'ry up he knows not how. Shakspeare.

THIEVISH. adj. [from thief.]

1. Given to stealing; practising theft.

What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food?
Or with a base and boist'rous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road? Shakspeare.
O thievish night,

Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.

The thievish God suspected him, and took
The hind aside, and thus in whispers spoke:
Discover not the theft. Addison.

2. Secret; sly; acting by stealth.

Four and twenty times the pilot's glass
Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass. Shakspeare.

THIEVISHLY. adv. [from thievish.]

They lay not to live by their worke,
But thievishly loiter and lurke. Tusser.

THIEVISHNESS. n. f. [from thievish.]
Disposition to steal; habit of stealing.

THIGH. n. f. [ðeop, Saxon; thico, Islandick; die, Dutch.]

The thigh includes all between the buttocks and the knee. The thigh bone is the longest of all the bones in the body: its fibres are close and hard: it has a cavity in its middle: it is a little convex and round on its fore side, but a little hollow, with a long and small ridge on its back side. Quincy.

He touched the hollow of his thigh, and it was out of joint. Genes.

The flesh dissolved, and left the thigh bone bare. Wiseman.

THILK. pronoun. [ðile, Saxon.] That fame. Obsolete.

I love thilk lass: alas, why do I love?
She deigns not my good will, but doth reprove,
And of my rural musick holdeth scorn. Spenser.

THILL. n. f. [ðille, Saxon, a piece of timber cut.] The shafts of a waggon;
the arms of wood between which the last horse is placed.

More easily a waggon may be drawn in rough ways, if the fore wheels were as high as the hinder wheels, and if the thills were fixed under the axis. Mortimer.

THILL-HORSE. } n. f. [thill and horse.]
THILLER. } The last horse; the horse that goes between the shafts.

Whose bridle and saddle, whitlether and nall,
With collars and harnais for thiller and all. Tusser.

What a beard hast thou got! thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my thill horse has on his tail. Shakspeare.

THIMBLE. n. f. [This is supposed by Minsbew to be corrupted from thumb-bell.] A metal cover by which women secure their fingers from the needle when they sew.

Your ladies and pale visag'd maids,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gantlets change,
Their needles to lances, Shakspeare.

Examine Venus and the Moon,
Who stole a thimble or a spoon. Hudibras.

Veins that run perpendicularly to the horizon, have valves sticking to their sides like so many thimbles; which, when the blood presses back, stop its passage, but are compressed by the forward motion of the blood. Cbeysne.

THIME. n. f. [thymus, Latin; thym, Fr.]
A fragrant herb from which the bees are supposed to draw honey. This should be written thyme.

Fair marigolds, and bees alluring thyme. Spenser.

THIN. adj. [ðinn, Saxon; thunner, Islandick; dunn, Dutch.]

1. Not thick.

Beat gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires. Exodus.

2. Rare; not dense.

The hope of the ungodly is like thin froth, that is blown away with the wind. Wisdom.

In the day when the air is more thin, the sound pierceth better; but when the air is more thick, as in the night, the sound spendeth and spreadeth abroad less. Bacon.

Understand the same
Of fish within their wat'ry residence;
Not hither summon'd, since they cannot change
Their element, to draw the thinner air. Milton.

The waters of Boristhenes are so thin and light, that they swim upon the top of the stream of the river Hypanis. More.

To warm new milk pour any alkali, the liquor will remain at rest, though it appear somewhat thinner. Arbutnot.

3. Not close; separate by large spaces.

He pleas'd the thin and bashful audience
Of our well-meaning, frugal ancestors. Roscommon.

Thou art weak, and full of art is he;
Else how could he that host seduce to sin,
Whose fall has left the heav'nly nation thin?
Dryden.

Northward, beyond the mountains we will go,
Where rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow,
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields;
The sand no gold, the mine no silver yields. Dryd.
Thin on the tow'rs they stand; and ev'n those few,
A feeble, fainting, and dejected crew. Dryden.
Already Caesar

Has ravag'd more than half the globe; and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Addis.
Sick with the love of fame, what throngs pour in,
Unpeople court, and leave the senate thin! Young.

4. Not closely compacted or accumulated.
Seven thin ears blasted with the east wind sprung up. Genesis.

5. Exile; small.
I hear the groans of ghosts;
Thin, hollow sounds, and lamentable screams.
Dryden.

6. Not coarse; not gross in substance: as,
a thin veil.

7. Not abounding.
Ferrara is very large, but extremely thin of people.
Addison.

8. Not fat; not bulky; lean; slim; slender.
A slim thin gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost; and when he had stuffed his guts well, the hole was too little to get out again.
L'Estrange.

THIN, adv. Not thickly.
Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and the natives being exhausted in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Remove the swelling epithets, thick laid
As varnish on a harlot's cheek; the rest
Thin sown with aught of profit or delight. Milton.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise,
That last infirmity of noble mind,
To scorn delights, and love laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred sheers,
And flits the thin-spun life. Milton.
Thin-leaved arbut hazle-graffs receives,
And planes huge apples bear, that bore but leaves.
Dryden.

A country gentlewoman, if it be like to rain, goes not abroad thin clad. Locke.

To THIN, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make thin or rare; to make less thick.

The serum of the blood is neither acid nor alkali-line: oil of vitriol thickens, and oil of tartar thins
it a little. Arbutnot.

2. To make less close or numerous.
The bill against root and branch never passed, till both houses were sufficiently thinned and overawed.
King Charles.

To unload the branches, or the leaves to thin,
That suck the vital moisture of the vine. Dryden.
'Tis Caesar's sword has made Rome's senate little,
And thinn'd its ranks. Addison.

3. To attenuate.
The vapours, by the solar heat
Thinn'd and exhal'd, rise to their airy seat. Blackm.

THINE, pronoun. [thin, Gothick; ðin, Saxon; dijn, Dutch.] Belonging or relating to thee; the pronoun possessive of thou. It is used for thy when the substantive is divided from it: as, this is thy house; thine is this house; this house is thine.

Thou hast her, France; let her be thine, for we Have no such daughter. Shakspeare.

THING, n. s. [ding, Sax. ding, Dut.]

1. Whatever is; not a person. A general word.

Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.
—You have a thing for me!
It is a common thing—
—Ha!
—To have a foolish wife. Shakspeare.

The great master he found busy in packing up his things against his departure. Kneller.

The remnant of the meat-offering is a thing most holy. Leviticus.

Says the master, You devour the same things that they would have eaten, mice and all. L'Estrange.

When a thing is capable of good proof in any kind, men ought to rest satisfied in the best evidence for it which that kind of things will bear, and beyond which better would not be expected, supposing it were true. Wilkins.

I should blush to own so rude a thing,
As 'tis to shun the brother of my king. Dryden.

Wicked men, who understand any thing of wisdom, may see the imprudence of worldly and irreligious courses. Tillotson.

Princes, when they come to know the true itate of things, are not unwilling to prevent their own ruin. Davenant.

2. It is used in contempt.

I have a thing in prose, begun about twenty-eight years ago, and almost finished: it will make a four shilling volume. Swift.

3. It is used of persons in contempt, or sometimes with pity.

See, sons, what things you are! how quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish over-careful fathers Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care. Shakspeare.

A thing by neither man or woman priz'd,
And scarcely known enough to be despis'd. Dryden.
Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man.
Congreve.

The poor thing sigh'd, and, with a blessing expressed with the utmost vehemence, turned from me.
Addison.

I'll be this abject thing no more.
Love, give me back my heart again. Granville.

4. It is used by Shakspeare once in a sense of honour.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath: but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my wrapt heart.
Shakspeare.

To THINK, v. n. pret. thought. [thank-gan, Gothick; ðencean, Saxon; dencken, Dutch.]

1. To have ideas; to compare terms or things; to reason; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation, whether of apprehension, judgment, or illation.

Thinking, in the propriety of the English tongue, signifies that sort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active; where it, with some degree of voluntary attention, considers any thing. Locke.

What am I? or from whence? for that I am
I know, because I think; but whence I came,
Or how this frame of mine began to be,
What other being can disclose to me? Dryden.

Those who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill, will have little matter to think on. Locke.

It is an opinion, that the soul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itself constantly, and that actual thinking is as inseparable from the soul, as actual extension is from the body.
Locke.

These are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon.
His experience of a good prince must give great satisfaction to every thinking man. Addison.

2. To judge; to conclude; to determine.

Let them marry to whom they think best; only to their father's tribe shall they marry. Numbers.

I fear we shall not find
This long desired king such as was thought. Daniel.

Can it be thought that I have kept the gospel terms of salvation, without ever so much as intending, in any serious and deliberate manner, either to know them, or keep them? Law.

3. To intend.

Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give,
As one near death to those that wish him live.
Shakspeare.

4. To imagine; to fancy.
Something since his coming forth is thought of, which

Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger,
That his return was most requir'd. Shakspeare.

Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life. Shakspeare.

We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature hath provoked men to think of and observe such a thing. Burnet.

Those who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter garden. Spectator.

5. To muse; to meditate.

You pine, you languish, love to be alone,
Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh.
Dryden.

6. To recollect; to observe.

We are come to have the warrant.
—Well thought upon; I have it here about me.
Shakspeare.

Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done. Nehemiah.

7. To judge; to be of opinion.

If your general acquaintance be among ladies, provided they have no ill reputation, you think you are safe. Swift.

8. To consider; to doubt; to deliberate.

Any one may think with himself, how then can any thing live in Mercury and Saturn? Bentley.

9. To THINK on. To contrive; to light upon by meditation.

Still the work was not complete,
When Venus thought on a deceit. Swift.

10. To THINK of. To estimate.

The opinions of others whom we know and think well of are no ground of assent. Locke.

To THINK, v. a.

1. To imagine; to image in the mind; to conceive.

Charity thinketh no evil. 1 Corinthians.
Nor think superfluous others aid. Milton.
Think nought a trifle, though it small appear.
Young.

2. To believe; to esteem.

Nor think superfluous others aid. Milton.

3. To THINK much. To grudge.

He thought not much to clothe his enemies.
Milton.

If we consider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reason to think much to sacrifice to him our dearest interests in this world. Tillotson.

4. To THINK scorn. To disdain.

He thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone.
Esther.

{ Me THINKETH. It seems to me. }

{ Me THOUGHT. It appeared to me. }

These are anomalous phrases of long continuance and great authority, but not easily reconciled to grammar. In me thinketh, the verb being of the third person, seems to be referred not to the thing, and is therefore either active, as signifying to cause to think; or has the sense of seems, methinks it seems to me.

Me thought I saw the grave where Laura lay.
Sidney.

Me thinketh the running of the foremost is like that of Ahimaaz. 2 Samuel.

THINKER, n. s. [from think.] One who thinks in a certain manner.

No body is made any thing by hearing of rules, or laying them up in his memory; practice must settle the habit: you may as well hope to make a good musician by a lecture on the art of music, as a coherent thinker, or strict reasoner, by a set of rules. Locke.

If a man had an ill-favoured nose, deep thinkers would impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

THINKING, n. s. [from think.] Imagination; cogitation; judgment.

He put it by once; but, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Shakspeare.

If we did think
His contemplations were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual objects, he should still Dwell in his musings; but I am afraid
His thinkings are below the moon, nor worth
His serious considering. Shakspeare.

I heard a bird so sing,
Whose musick, to my thinking, pleas'd the king. Shakspeare.

I was a man, to my thinking, very likely to get a rich widow. Addison.

THINLY. adv. [from thin.]

1. Not thickly.
2. Not closely; not numerously.

It is commonly opinioned, that the earth was thinly inhabited before the flood. Brown.

Our walls are thinly mann'd; our best men slain:
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching. Dryden.

THINNESS. n. f. [from thin.]

1. The contrary to thickness; exility; tenuity.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes and sides, because of the thinness of the skin. Bacon.

No breach, but an expansion,
Like gold to airy thinness beat. Donne.

Transparent substances, as glass, water, air, &c.
when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherwise formed into plates, do exhibit various colours, according to their various thinness, although at a greater thickness they appear very clear and colourless. Newton.

Such depend upon a strong projectile motion of the blood, and too great thinness and delicacy of the vessels. Arbuthnot.

2. Paucity; scarcity.

The buzzard
Invites the feather'd Nimrod of his race
To hide the thinness of their flock from sight,
And all together make a seeming goodly flight. Dryden.

In country villages pope Leo the seventh indulged a practice, through the thinness of the inhabitants, which opened a way for pluralities. Ayliffe.

3. Rareness; not spissitude.

Those pleasures that spring from honour the mind can nauseate, and quickly feel the thinness of a popular breath. South.

THIRD. adj. [θρίττος, Saxon.] The first after the second; the ordinal of three.

This is the third time: I hope good luck lies in odd numbers. Shakspeare.

Such clamours are like the feigned quarrels of combined cheats, to delude some third person. Decay of Piety.

THIRD. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The third part.

To thee and thine hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakspeare.

Men of their broken debtors take a third,
A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrive again. Shakspeare.

The protestant subjects of the abbey make up a third of its people. Addison.

No sentence can stand that is not confirmed by two thirds of the council. Addison.

2. The sixtieth part of a second.

Divide the natural day into twenty-four equal parts, an hour into sixty minutes, a minute into sixty seconds, a second into sixty thirds. Holder.

THIRDBOROUGH. n. f. [third and borough.] An under constable.

THIRDLY. adv. [from third.] In the third place.

First, metals are more durable than plants; secondly, they are more solid; thirdly, they are wholly subterrany. Bacon.

To THIRL. v. a. [θίρειν, Saxon.] To pierce; to perforate. It is now pronounced and written thrill. Ainsworth.

THIRST. n. f. [θύρστος, Saxon; dorst,
Dutch.]

1. The pain suffered for want of drink;
want of drink.

VOL. II,

But fearless they pursue, nor can the flood Quench their dire thirst; alas! they thirst for blood. Denham.

Thus accurs'd,
In midst of water I complain of thirst. Dryden.
Thirst and hunger denote the state of spittle and liquor of the stomach. Thirst is the sign of an acrimony commonly alkalescent or muriatick. Arbuthnot.

For forty years
I've liv'd an anchorite in pray'rs and tears:
Yon spring, which bubbles from the mountain's side;
Has all the luxury of thirst supply'd. Harte.

2. Eagerness; vehement desire: with of,
for, or after.

Not hope of praise, nor thirst of worldly good,
Enticed us to follow this emprise. Fairfax.

Thou hast allay'd the thirst I had of knowledge. Milton.

Say, is't thy bounty, or thy thirst of praise? Granville.

This is an active and ardent thirst after happiness, or after a full beatifying object. Cheyne.

3. Drought.

The rapid current, through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst up drawn,
Rose a fresh fountain. Milton.

To THIRST. v. n. [θύρσταν, Saxon; der-sten, Dutch.]

1. To feel want of drink; to be thirsty or athirst: with for.

They shall not hunger nor thirst. Isaiab.
The people thirsted there for water. Exodus.

They as they thirsted scoop the brimming stream. Milton.

2. To have a vehement desire for any thing: with for or after.

My soul thirsteth for the living God. Psalms.

Till a man hungers and thirsts after righteousness, till he feels an uneasiness in the want of it, his will will not be determined to any action in pursuit of this confessed, greater good. Locke.

But furious thirsting thus for gore,
The sons of men shall ne'er approach thy shore. Pope.

To THIRST. v. a. To want to drink. This structure is not usual.

Untam'd and fierce the tyger still remains:
For the kind gifts of water and of food,
He seeks his keeper's flesh, and thirsts his blood. Prior.

THIRSTINESS. n. f. [from thirst.] The state of being thirsty.

Next they will want a sucking and soaking thirsti-ness, or a fiery appetite to drink in the lime. Wotton.

THIRSTY. adj. [θύρστις, Saxon.]

1. Suffering want of drink; pained for want of drink.

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drank, Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance. Shakspeare.

Give me a little water to drink, for I am thirsty. Judges.

Unworthy was thy fate,
To fall beneath a base assassin's stab,
Whom all the thirsty instruments of death
Had in the field of battle sought in vain. Rowe.

2. Possessed with any vehement desire: as, blood thirsty.

THIRTEEN. adj. [θρεοτίνη, Saxon.]
Ten and three.

Speaking at the one end, I heard it return the voice thirteen times. Bacon.

THIRTEENTH. adj. [from thirteen; θρεοτεοδα, Saxon.] The third after the tenth.

If she could prove a thirteenth task for him
Who twelve achiev'd, the work would me beseech. Beaum. Pfyche.

The thirteenth part difference bringeth the business but to such a pass, that every woman may have an husband. Graunt.

THIRTIETH. adj. [from thirty; θριττεγοδα, Saxon.] The tenth thrice told;
the ordinal of thirty.

Henry shall espouse the lady Margaret ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing. Shakspeare.

More will wonder at so short an age,
To find a blank beyond the thirtieth page. Dryden.

THIRTY. adj. [θριττις, Saxon.] Thrice ten.

I have slept fifteen years.
—Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me. Shakspeare.

The Claudian aqueduct ran thirty-eight miles. Addison.

THIS. pronoun. [θίς, Saxon.]

1. That which is present; what is now mentioned.

Bardolph and Nim had more valour than this, yet they were both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst steal. Shakspeare.

Come a little nearer this way. Shakspeare.

Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say a moving grove. Shakspeare.

Must I endure all this? Shakspeare.

This same shall comfort us concerning our toil. Genesis.

This is not the place for a large reduction. Hale.

There is a very great inequality among men as to their internal endowments, and their external conditions, in this life. Calamy.

2. The next future.

Let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak yet but this once: peradventure ten shall be found there. Genesis.

3. This is used for this time.

By this the vessel half her course had run. Dryden.

4. The last past.

I have not wept this forty years; but now
My mother comes afresh into my eyes. Dryden.

5. It is often opposed to that.

As when two winds with rival force contend,
This way and that, the wav'ring sails they bend,
While freezing Boreas, and black Eurus blow,
Now here, now there, the reeling vessel throw. Pope.

According as the small parts of matter are connected together after this or that determinate manner, a body of this or that denomination is produced. Boyle.

Do we not often hear of this or that young heir?
are not his riches and his lewdnesses talked of together? South.

This way and that the impatient captives tend,
And pressing for release the mountains rend. Dryden.

6. When this and that respect a former sentence, this relates to the latter, that to the former member. See THOSE.

Their judgment in this we may not, and in that we need not follow. Hooker.

7. Sometimes it is opposed to the other.

Consider the arguments which the author had to write this, or to design the other, before you arraign him. Dryden.

With endless pain this man pursues
What, if he gain'd, he could not use:
And the other fondly hopes to see What never was, nor e'er shall be. Prior.

THISTLE. n. f. [θίρτελ, Saxon; diestel, Dutch; carduus, Latin.] A prickly weed growing in corn fields.

The leaves of the thistle grow alternately on the branches, and are prickly; and the heads are, for the most part, squamose and prickly. Miller.

The roots of thistles have my hunger fed,
Two roods of cultur'd barley give me bread,
A rock my pillow, and green moss my bed. Harte.

Hateful docks, rough thistles, keckies, burs. Shakspeare.

Get you some carduus benedictus, and lay it to your heart.

—There thou prick'st her with a thistle. Shakspeare.

Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth. Milton.

Tough thistles choak'd the fields, and kill'd the corn,

And an unthrifty crop of weeds was born. Dryden.

T H O

Rie grafts will kill thistles. Mortimer.
THISTLE, golden. n. s. A plant. Miller.

 We can never be grieved for their miseries who are thoroughly wicked, and have thereby justly called their calamities on themselves. Dryden.
 One would think, that every member of the community who embraces with vehemence the principles of either party, had thoroughly sifted and examined them. Addison.
 They had forgotten their solemn vows as thoroughly
 as if they had never made them. Atterbury.
THOROUGHPA'CED, adj. [thorough and pace.] Perfect in what is undertaken;

T H O

complete; thoroughsped. Generally in a bad sense.
 When it was proposed to repeal the test clause, the ablest of those who were reckoned the most staunch and thoroughpaced whigs fell off at the first mention of it. Swift.
THOROUGHSPED, adj. [thorough and sped.] Finished in principles; thoroughpaced; commonly, finished in ill.

 Make all our trumpets speak, give them all breath,
 These clam'rous harbingers of blood and death. Shakspeare.
 Sure there are poets which did never dream
 Upon Parnassus, nor did taste the stream
 Of Helicon; we therefore may suppose
 Those made not poets, but the poets those. Denham.
 The fibres of this muscle act as those of others. Cheyne.
 2. Those refers to the former, these to the latter noun.
 Neither their sighs nor tears are true,
 Those idly blow, these idly fall,
 Nothing like to ours at all,
 But sighs and tears have sexes too. Cowley.
THOU, pronoun. [ðu, Saxon; du, Dutch; in the oblique cases singular thee, te, Saxon; in the plural ye, ge, Saxon; in the oblique cases plural you, eop, Saxon.] You is now commonly used for the nominative plural.
 1. The second pronoun personal.
 Is this a dagger which I see before me,
 The handle tow'rd my hand? Come, let me clutch thee,
 I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.
 Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
 To feeling as to sight? Shakspeare.
 I am as like to call thee so again,
 To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too:
 If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
 As to thy friend. Shakspeare.
 Thou, if there be a thou in this base town,
 Who dares with angry Eupolis to frown;
 Who at enormous villany turns pale,
 And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryden.
 2. It is used only in very familiar or very solemn language. When we speak to equals or superiours, we say you; but in solemn language, and in addresses of worship, we say thou.
 [Familiar.]
 [Solemn.]
 For though in dreadful whirls we hung
 High on the broken wave,
 I know thou wert not slow to hear,
 Nor impotent to save. Addison.
TO THOU, v. a. [from thou.] To treat with familiarity.
 Taunt him with the licence of ink; if thou thou him some thrice, it shall not be amiss. Shakspeare.

 prepared for those that love him, though they be such as eye hath not seen, ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive. Locke.

Though the name of abstracted ideas is attributed to universal ideas, yet this abstraction is not great. Watts.

2. As THOUGH. As if; like as if.
 In the vine were three branches; and it was as though it budded. Genesis.

3. It is used at the end of a sentence in familiar language: however; yet.

You shall not quit Cydaria for me:
 'Tis dang'rous though to treat me in this sort,
 And to refuse my offers, though in sport. Dryden.

A good cause would do well though;
 It gives my sword an edge. Dryden.

THOUGHT. The preterit and participle passive of think.

I told him what I thought. Shakspeare.

Are my friends embark'd?

Can any thing be thought of for their service?

Whilst I yet live, let me not live in vain. Addison.

11. Expectation.

The main descry

Stands on the hourly thought. Shakspeare.

12. A small degree; a small quantity. It seems a loose term, but is used by good writers.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow. Sidney.

If our own be but equal, the law of common indulgence alloweth us to think them at the least half a thought the better, because they are our own. Hooker.

A needle pierced through a globe of cork, cut away by degrees, will swim under water, yet not sink unto the bottom: if the cork be a thought too light to sink under the surface, the water may be attenuated with spirits of wine. Brown.

My giddiness seized me; and though I now totter, yet I think I am a thought better. Swift.

THOUGHTFUL. adj. [thought and full.]

1. Contemplative; full of reflection; full of meditation.

On these he mus'd within his thoughtful mind,
 And then resolv'd what Faunus had divin'd. Dryden.

2. Attentive; careful.

Thoughtful of gain, I all the live-long day
 Consume in meditation deep. Philips.

3. Promoting meditation; favourable to musing.

War, horrid war, your thoughtful walks invades,
 And steel now glitters in the mules' shades. Pope.

4. Anxious; solicitous.

In awful pomp, and melancholy state,
 See settled reason on the judgment-seat;
 Around her crowd distrust, and doubt and fear,
 And thoughtful foresight, and tormenting care. Prior.

THOUGHTFULLY. adv. [from thoughtful.]

With thought or consideration; with solicitude.

THOUGHTFULNESS. n. s. [from thoughtful.]

1. Deep meditation.

While the nervous fibres preserve their due tension and firmness, and the spirits are transmitted to them from the brain, endowed with due strength, swiftness, and vivacity, and suffered to attend their duty, without the avocations of thoughtfulness and intense contemplation, the concoction of the meats is well performed. Blackmore.

2. Anxiety; solicitude.

THOUGHTLESS. adj. [from thought.]

1. Airy; gay; dissipated.

2. Negligent; careless.

It is something peculiarly shocking to see gray hairs without remorse for the past, and thoughtless of the future. Rogers.

3. Stupid; dull.

His goodly fabrick fills the eye,
 And seems design'd for thoughtless majesty:
Thoughtless as monarch oaks that shade the plain,
 And spread in solemn state supinely reign. Dryden.

THOUGHTLESSLY. adv. [from thoughtless.]

Without thought; carelessly; stupidly.

In restless hurries thoughtlessly they live,
 At substance oft unmov'd, for shadows grieve. Garth.

THOUGHTLESSNESS. n. s. [from thoughtless.] Want of thought; absence of thought.

THOUGHTSICK. adj. [thought and sick.] Uneasy with reflection.

Heav'n's face doth glow
 With tristful visage; and, as 'gainst the doom,
 Is thoughtsick at the act. Shakspeare.

THOUSAND. adj. or n. s. [Thyrend, Sax. duysend, Dutch.]

1. The number of ten hundred.

About three thousand years ago, navigation of the world for remote voyages was greater than at this day. Bacon.

2. Proverbially, a great number.

So fair, and thousand, thousand times more fair
 She seem'd, when the presented was to fight. Spenser.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd,
 Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd. Dryden.

Search the herald's roll,
 Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree,
 Drawn from the root of some old Tuscan tree,
 And thou, a thousand off, a fool of long degree. Dryden.

Though he regulates himself by justice, he finds a thousand occasions for generosity and compassion. Spectator.

How many thousands pronounce boldly on the affairs of the publick, whom God nor men never qualified for such judgment! Watts.

THOUSANDTH. adj. [from thousand.] The hundredth ten times told; the ordinal of a thousand: proverbially, very numerous.

He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but a part of a thousandth part in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapt him o' th' shoulder, but I'll warrant him heart whole. Shakspeare.

Such is the poet's lot: what luckier fate
 Does on the works of grave historians wait?
 More time they spend, in greater toils engage,
 Their volumes swell beyond the thousandth page. Dryden.

The French hugonots are many thousand witnesses to the contrary; and I wish they deserved the thousandth part of the good treatment they have received. Swift.

THOWL. n. s. A piece of timber by which oars are kept in their places when rowing. Ainslie.

THRALDOM. n. s. [from thrall.] Slavery; servitude.

How far am I inferior to thee in the state of the mind! and yet know I that all the heavens cannot bring me to such thraldom. Sidney.

He swore with fobs,
 That he would labour my delivery.
 —Why so he doth, when he delivers you
 From this earth's thraldom to the joys of heav'n. Shakspeare.

This country, in a great part desolate, groaneth under the Turkish thraldom. Sandys.

He shall rule, and the in thraldom live. Dryden.
 They tell us we are all born slaves; life and thraldom we entered into together, and can never be quit of the one till we part with the other. Locke.

THRALL. n. s. [Thral, Saxon.]

1. A slave; one who is in the power of another. Not much in use.

No thralls like them that inward bondage have. Sidney.

But sith she will the conquest challenge need,
 Let her accept me as her faithful thrall. Spenser.
 Look gracious on thy prostrate thrall. Shakspeare.

The two delinquents
 That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep. Shakspeare.

I know I'm one of Nature's little kings;
 Yet to the least and vilest things am thrall. Davies.
 That we may so suffice his vengeful ire,
 Or do him mightier service, as his thralls
 By right of war, whate'er his business be. Milton.

2. Bondage; state of slavery or confinement.

Her men took land,
 And first brought forth Ulysses, bed, and all
 That richly furnish'd it; he still in thrall. Chapman.
 Of all-subduing sleepe.
 And laid about him, till his nose
 From thrall of ring and cord broke loose. Hudibras.

TO THRALL. v. a. Spenser. [from the noun.] To enslave; to bring into the power of another. Out of use.

Let me be a slave t' achieve the maid,
 Whose sudden sight hath thrall'd my wounded eye. Shakspeare.

THR

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode
The bad with bad, a spider with a toad.
For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will.

Donne.

The author of nature is not thrall'd to the laws of nature.

Drummond.

THRAPPLE. n. f. The windpipe of any animal. They still retain it in the Scottish dialect; we say rather throttle.

To THRASH. v. a. [ðanjan, Saxon; derfchen, Dutch.]

1. To beat corn to free it from the chaff.
This is written variously thrash or thresh,
but thrash is agreeable to etymology.

First thrash the corn, then after burn the straw.

Shakspeare.

Gideon thresh'd wheat to hide it.

Judges.

Here be oxen for burnt sacrifice, and threshing instrument for wood.

2 Samuel.

In the sun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out, and winnow it by day.

Dryden.

This is to preserve the ends of the bones from an incalescency, which they being hard bodies would contract from a swift motion; such as that of running or threshing.

Ray.

Out of your clover well dried in the sun, after the first threshing, get what seed you can.

Mortimer.

2. To beat; to drub.

Thou scurvy valiant ass! thou art here but to thrash Trojans, and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit like a Barbarian slave.

Shakspeare.

To THRASH. v. n. To labour; to drudge.

I rather would be Mevius, thresh for rhimes
Like his, the scorn and scandal of the times,
Than that Philippick fatally divine,
Which is inscrib'd the second, should be mine.

Dryden.

THRA'SHER. n. f. [from thrash.] One who thrashes corn.

Our soldiers, like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.

Shakspeare.

Not barely the plowman's pains, the reaper's and thresh'er's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat: the labour of those employed about the utensils must all be charged.

Locke.

THRA'SHINGFLOOR. n. f. An area on which corn is beaten.

In vain the hinds the threshing-floor prepare,
And exercise their flails in empty air.

Dryden.

Delve of convenient depth your threshing-floor
With temper'd clay, then fill and face it o'er.

Dryden.

THRASO'NICAL. adj. [from Thraso, a boaster in old comedy.] Boastful;

ment of cloth.

Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord and vile reproach.

Shakspeare.

Though the slender thread of dyed silk looked on single seem devoid of redness, yet when numbers of these threads are brought together, their colour becomes notorious.

Boyle.

Though need urg'd me never so,
He not receive a thread, but naked go.

Chapman.

He who sat at a table with a sword hanging over his head but by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite.

South.

The art of pleasing is the skill of cutting to a thread betwixt flattery and ill-manners.

L'Estrange.

2. Any thing continued in a course; uniform tenor.

THR

The eagerness and trembling of the fancy doth not always regularly follow the same even thread of discourse, but strikes upon some other thing that hath relation to it.

Burnet.

The gout being a disease of the nervous parts, makes it so hard to cure; diseases are so as they are more remote in the thread of the motion of the fluids.

Arbutnot.

To THREAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pass through with a thread.

The largest crooked needle, with a ligature of the size of that I have threaded it with, in taking up the spermatick vessels.

Sharp.

and set a new nap upon it: so he had need; for 'tis threadbare.

Shakspeare.

Will any freedom here from you be borne,
Whose cloaths are threadbare, and whose cloaks are torn?

Dryden.

He walk'd the streets, and wore a threadbare
cloak;

He din'd and supp'd at charge of other folk.

Swift.

A Thracian slave the porter's place maintain'd,
Sworn foe to threadbare suppliants, and with pride
His master's presence, nay, his name, deny'd.

Harte.

2. Worn out; trite.

A hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A threadbare juggler, and a fortune-teller.

Shakspeare.

Many writers of moral discourses run into stale topics and threadbare quotations, not handling their subject fully and closely.

Swift.

If he understood trade, he would not have mentioned this threadbare and exploded project.

Child.

THRE'ADEN. adj. [from thread.] Made of thread.

Behold the threaden sails,
Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea.

Shakspeare.

The fruit, it gives you life
To knowledge by the threat'ner.

Milton.

THRE'ATENING. n. f. [from threaten.] A menace; a denunciation of evil.

Aeneas their assault undaunted did abide,
And thus to Lausus loud with friendly threat'ning cry'd.

Dryden.

How impossible would it be for a master, that thus interceded with God for his servants, to use any unkind threatnings towards them, to damn and curse them as dogs and scoundrels, and treat them only as the dregs of the creation!

Lat.

THRE'ATENINGLY. adv. [from threaten.]

With menace; in a threatening manner.
The honour that thus flames in your fair eyes,
Before I speak, too threat'ningly replies.

Shakspeare.

A threefold cord is not easily broken.

Ecclesiasticus.

By a threefold justice the world hath been governed from the beginning: by a justice natural, by which the parents and elders of families governed their children, in which the obedience was called natural piety: again, by a justice divine, drawn from the laws of God: and the obedience was called conscience: and lastly, by a justice civil, begotten by both the former; and the obedience to this we call duty.

Raleigh.

A threefold offering to his altar bring,
A bull, a ram, a boar.

Pope.

should you kill a man that kills nobody?
L'Estrange.

THRO'ATPIPE. n. f. [throat and pipe.]
The weason; the windpipe.

THRO'ATWORT. n. f. [throat and wort;
digitalis, Lat.] A plant.

To THROB. v. n. [from θροβω, Minshew and Junius; formed in imitation of the sound, Skinner; perhaps contracted from throw up.]

1. To heave; to beat; to rise as the breast with sorrow or distress.

Here may his head live on my throbbing breast.
Shakspeare.

My heart throbs to know one thing:
Shall Banquo's issue ever reign? Shakspeare.
'Twas the clash of swords: my troubled heart
Is so cast down, and sunk amidst its sorrows,
It throbs with fear, and akes at every sound.
Addison.

How that warm'd me! How my throbbing heart

Leapt to the image of my father's joy,
When you should strain me in your folding arms!
Smith.

2. To beat; to palpitate.

In the depending orifice there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneurism, the blood being choaked in by the confused flesh. Wiseman.

THROB. n. f. [from the verb.] Heave;
beat; stroke of palpitation.

She sigh'd from bottom of her wounded breast,
And after many bitter throbs did throw,
With lips full pale, and fault'ring tongue oppress'd.
Spenser.

Thou talk'st like one who never felt
Th' impatient throbs and longings of a soul
That pants and reaches after distant good.
Addison.

THROE. n. f. [from θροπια, to suffer,
Saxon.]

1. The pain of travail; the anguish of bringing children: it is likewise written throw.

Lucina lent not me her bed,
But took me in my throes. Shakspeare.

His persuasive and practical tract, which was exceeding agreeable to his desires, cost him most throes and pangs of birth. Fell.

My womb pregnant and now excessive grown,
Prodigious motion felt and rueful throes. Milton.
Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shakings, and of grinding pain,
My throes come thicker, and my cries increas'd.
Dryden.

Reflect on that day, when earth shall be again in travail with her sons, and at one fruitful throe bring forth all the generations of learned and unlearned, noble and ignoble dust. Rogers.

2. Any extreme agony; the final and mortal struggle.

O man! have mind of that most bitter throe,
For as the tree does fall, so lies it ever low.
Spenser.

To ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love, with other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will do
Some kindness to them. Shakspeare.

To THROE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in agonies.

The setting of thine eye and cheek proclaim
A matter from thee, and a birth, indeed,
Which throes thee much to yield. Shakspeare.

THRONE. n. f. [θρονος, Lat. Spens.]

1. A royal seat; the seat of a king.

Boundless intemperance hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. Shakspeare.

Th' eternal Father from his throne beheld Their multitude. Milton.

Stonehenge, once thought a temple, you have found

A throne where kings were crown'd. Dryden.

We have now upon the throne a king willing and able to correct the abuses of the age. Davenant.

2. The seat of a bishop.

Bishops preached on the steps of the altar standing, having not as yet assumed the state of a throne.
Ayliffe.

To THRONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To enthone; to set on a royal seat.

They have, as who have not, whom their great stars

Thron'd and set high? Shakspeare.

True image of the father, whether thron'd
In the bosom of bliss and light of light, Conceiving or remote from heav'n, enshrin'd
In fleshly tabernacle and human form. Milton.

He thron'd in glass, and nam'd it Caroline.
Pope.

THRONG. n. f. [θρανγ, Saxon; from θρυνγαν, to press.] A crowd; a multitude pressing against each other.

Let us on heaps go offer up our lives:
We are enow yet living in the field,
To smother up the English in our throngs.
Shakspeare.

A throng
Of thick short fobs in thund'ring volleys float,
And roul themselves over her lubrick throat
In panting murmurs. Crasshaw.

This book, the image of his mind,
Will make his name not hard to find.
I with the throng of great and good Made it less eas'y understood. Waller.

With studious thought observ'd th' illustrious thrang,

In nature's order as they pass'd along;
Their names, their fates. Dryden.

To THRONG. v. n. [from the noun.] To crowd; to come in tumultuous multitudes.

I have seen
The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind
To hear him speak. Shakspeare.

His mother could not longer bear the agitations of so many passions as throng'd upon her, but fell upon his neck, crying out, My son! Tatler.

To THRONG. v. a. To oppress or incommode with crowds or tumults.

I'll say, thou hast gold:

Thou wilt be throng'd too shortly. Shakspeare.

The multitude throng thee and press thee. Luke.

All access was throng'd, the gates Thick swarm'd. Milton.

THROSTLE. n. f. [θροrtle, Sax.] The thrush; a small singing bird.

The throble with his note so true,
The wren with little quill. Shakspeare.

The black-bird and throble with their melodious voices bid welcome to the cheerful spring. Walton.

THRO'TTLE. n. f. [from throat.] The windpipe; the larynx.

At the upper extreme it hath no larynx or thro- ttle to qualify the sound. Brown.

To THRO'TTLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To choke; to suffocate; to kill by stopping the breath.

I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accents in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly have broke off. Shakspeare.

As when Antæus in Irafra strove
With Jove's Alcides, and oft foil'd still rose, Receiving from his mother earth new strength,
Fresh from his fall and fiercer grapple join'd, Throttled at length in th' air, expir'd and fell. Milton.

His throat half throttled with corrupted phlegm,
And breathing through his jaws a belching steam. Dryden.

The throttling quinsy 'tis my star appoints,
And rheumatism I send to rack the joints. Dryden.

Throttle thyself with an ell of strong tape,
For thou hast not a groat to atone for a rape. Swift.

THROVE. The preterit of thrive.

England never throve so well, nor was there ever brought into England so great an increase of wealth since. Locke.

THROUGH. prep. [θρυ, Saxon; door,
Dutch; durch, German.]

1. From end to end of; along the whole mass or compass.

He hath been so successful with common heads, that he hath led their belief through all the works of nature. Brown.

Fame of th' asserted sea through Europe blown,
Made France and Spain ambitious of his love. Dryden.

2. Noting passage.

Through the gate of iv'ry he dismiss'd
His valiant offspring. Dryden.

The same thing happened when I removed the prism out of the sun's light, and looking through it upon the hole shining by the light of the clouds beyond it. Newton.

3. By transmission.

Through these hands this science has passed with great applause. Temple.

Material things are presented only through their senses; they have a real influx on these, and all real knowledge of material things is conveyed into the understanding through these senses. Coburn.

4. By means of; by agency of; in consequence of.

The strong through pleasure soonest falls, the weak through smart. Spenser.

Something you may deserve of him through me. Shakspeare.

By much slothfulness the building decayeth, and through idleness of the hands the house droppeth through. Ecclesiasticus.

You will not make this a general rule to debar such from preaching the gospel, as have through infirmity fallen. Whitgift.

Some through ambition, or through thirst of gold,
Have slain their brothers, and their country sold. Dryden.

To him, to him 'tis giv'n
Passion, and care, and anguish to destroy:
Through him soft peace, and plenitude of joy
Perpetual o'er the world redeem'd shall flow. Prior.

THROUGH. adv.

1. From one end or side to the other.

You'd be so lean, that blasts of January
Would blow you through and through. Shakspeare.

Made at our ship, that just before the prow
It overslew and fell. Chapman.

He heav'd a stone, and, rising to the throw,
He sent it in a whirlwind at the foe;
A tow'r assaulted by so rude a stroke,
With all its lofty battlements had shook. Addison.

2. A cast of dice; the manner in which the dice fall when they are cast.
If Hercules and Lichas play at dice
Which is the better man, the greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page. Shakspeare.
If they err finally, it is like a man's missing his cast when he throws dice for his life; his being, his happiness, and all is involved in the error of one throw. South.

Suppose any particular order of the alphabet to be assigned, and that twenty-four letters cast at a venture, so as to fall in a line; it is many million of millions odds to one against any single throw, that the assigned order will not be cast. Bentley.
The world, where lucky throws to blockheads fall,
Knives know the game, and honest men pay all.
Young.

deavouring to call off my attention; but both in vain. Pope.

2. [from thrust: as we say, a push; a breaking out.] By this name are called small, round, superficial ulcerations, which appear first in the mouth; but as they proceed from the obstruction of the emissaries of the saliva, by the lentor and viscosity of the humour, they may affect every part of the alimentary duct, except the thick guts: they are just the same in the inward parts as scabs in the skin, and fall off from the inside of the bowels like a crust: the nearer they approach to a white colour the less dangerous.

Arbutnot.

To THRUST. v. a. [trufito, Lat.]

1. To push any thing into matter, or between close bodies.

Thrust in thy fickle, and reap. Revelations.

THUMPER. n. f. [from thump.] The person or thing that thumps.

THUNDER. n. f. [ṡunden, ṡunon, Sax. dunder, Swedish; donder, Dutch; tonnerre, French.]

1. Thunder is a most bright flame rising on a sudden, moving with great violence, and with a very rapid velocity, through the air, according to any determination, upwards from the earth, horizontally, obliquely, downwards, in a right line, or in several right lines, as it were in serpentine tracts, joined at various angles, and commonly ending with a loud noise or rattling. Muschenbroek.

2. In popular and poetick language, thunder is commonly the noise, and lightning the flash; though thunder is sometimes taken for both.

I do not bid the thunder bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Shakspeare.

The revenging gods
Gainst paracides all the thunder bend. Shakspeare.
The thunder
Wing'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
To bellow through the vast and boundless deep. Milton.

3. Any loud noise or tumultuous violence.

So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
On either side, that neither mail could hold Ne shield defend the thunder of his throws. Spenser.

Here will we face this storm of insolence,
Nor fear the noisy thunder; let it roll,
Then burst, and spend at once its idle rage. Rowe.

To THUNDER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To make thunder.

His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Nor Jove for's power to thunder. Shakspeare.

2. To make a loud or terrible noise.

So soon as some few notable examples had thundered a duty into the subjects hearts, he soon shewed no baseness of suspicion. Sidney.

His dreadful name late through all Spain did thunder,
And Hercules' two pillars standing near Did make to quake and fear. Spenser.

His dreadful voice no more
Would thunder in my ears. Milton.

Like a black sheet the whelming billow spread,
Burst o'er the float, and thunder'd on his head. Pope.

To THUNDER. v. a.

1. To emit with noise and terrour.

Oracles severe
Were daily thunder'd in our general's ear,
That by his daughter's blood we must appease Diana's kindled wrath. Dryden.

2. To publish any denunciation or threat.

An archdeacon, as being a prelate, may thunder out an ecclesiastical censure. Ayliffe.

THUNDERBOLT. n. f. [thunder and bolt, as it signifies an arrow.]

1. Lightning; the arrows of heaven.

If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. Shakspeare.
Let the lightning of this thunderbolt, which hath been so severe a punishment to one, be a terrour to all. King Charles.

My heart does beat,
As if 'twere forging thunderbolts for Jove. Denham.
Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
The Scipios' worth, those thunderbolts of war? Dryden.

The most remarkable piece in Antonine's pillar, is Jupiter Pluvius sending down rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies; which is the greatest confirmation of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.

2. Fulmination; denunciation: properly ecclesiastical.

He severely threatens such with the thunderbolt of excommunication. Hakewill.

THUNDERCLAP. n. f. [thunder and clap.] Explosion of thunder.

The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
One day did scorn the simple scarabee,
Proud of his highest service, and good hap,
That made all other fowls his thralls to be. Spenser.
When some dreadful thunderclap is nigh,
The winged fire shoots swiftly through the sky;
Strikes and consumes ere scarce it does appear,
And, by the sudden ill, prevents the fear. Dryden.

When suddenly the thunderclap was heard,
It took us unprepar'd and out of guard. Dryden.

THUNDERER. n. f. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.

How dare you, ghosts,
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts? Shakspeare.
Had the old Greeks discover'd your abode,
Crete had n't been the cradle of your god;
On that small island they had look'd with scorn,
And in Great Britain thought the thunderer born. Waller.

When the bold Typhoeus
Forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The lesser gods, that shar'd his prosp'rous state,
All suffer'd in the exil'd thunderer's fate. Dryden.

THUNDEROUS. adj. [from thunder.] Producing thunder.

Look in and see each blissful deity,
How he before the thunderous throne doth lie. Milt.

THUNDERSHOWER. n. f. [thunder and shower.] A rain accompanied with thunder.

The conceit is long in delivering, and at last it comes like a thundershower, full of sulphur and darkness, with a terrible crack. Stillingfleet.

In thundershowers the winds and clouds are oftentimes contrary to one another, especially if hail falls, the sultry weather below directing the wind one way, and the cold above the clouds another. Derham.

THUNDERSTONE. n. f. [thunder and stone.]

A stone fabulously supposed to be emitted by thunder; thunderbolt.

Fear no more the lightning flash,
Nor th' all-dreaded thunderstone. Shakspeare.

To THUNDERSTRIKE. v. a. [thunder and strike.]

1. To blast or hurt with lightning.

I remained as a man thunderstricken, not daring, nay not able, to behold that power. Sidney.

The overthrown he rais'd, and as a herd
Of goats, or tim'rous flock, together throng'd, Drove them before him thunderstruck. Milton.
With the voice divine

Nigh thunderstruck, th' exalted man, to whom Such high attest was giv'n, a while survey'd
With wonder. Milton.

'Tis said that thunderstruck Enceladus Lies stretch'd supine. Addison.

2. To astonish with any thing terrible.

Fears from our hearts took
The very life; to be so thunderstrooke
With such a voice. Chapman.

THURIFEROUS. adj. [thurifer, Latin.] Bearing frankincense.

THURIFICATION. n. f. [thuris and facio, Latin.] The act of fuming with incense; the act of burning incense.

THURSDAY. n. f. [thorsgday, Danish; from thor. Thor was the son of Odin; yet in some of the northern parts they worshipped the supreme deity under his name, attributing the power over all things, even the inferiour deities, to him. Stillingfleet.] The fifth day of the week.

THUS. adv. [ṡuy, Saxon.]

1. In this manner; in this wise.

It cannot be that they who speak thus, should thus judge. Hooker.

The knight him calling asked who he was?
Who lifting up his head, him answer'd thus. Spens.

I returned with similar proof enough,
With tokens thus, and thus. Shakspeare.

To be thus is nothing;
But to be safely thus. Shakspeare.

I have sinned against the Lord, and thus and thus have I done. Josua.

The Romans used a like wise endeavour, and while in a higher, in a wiser strain, making concord a deity; thus seeking peace, not by an oath, but by prayer. Holyday.

That the principle that sets on work these organs, is nothing else but the modification of matter thus or thus posited, is false. Judge Hale.

Beware, I warn thee yet, to tell thy griefs
In terms becoming majesty to hear:

I warn thee thus, because I know thy temper
Is insolent. Dryden.

Thus in the triumphs of soft peace I reign. Dryden.

All were attentive to the godlike man,
When from his lofty couch he thus began. Dryden.

2. To this degree; to this quantity.

A counsellor of state in Spain laid to his master,
I will tell your majesty thus much for your comfort, your majesty hath but two enemies; whereof the one is all the world, and the other your own ministers. Bacon.

Even thus wise, that is, thus peaceable, were very heathens; thus peaceable among themselves, though without grace; thus peaceable by wife nature very like grace. Holyday.

He said, Thus far extend, thus far thy bounds. Milton.

Thus much concerning the first earth, and its production and form. Burnet.

No man reasonably pretends to know thus much, but he must pretend to know all things. Tilloison.

THY

This you must do to inherit life; and if you have come up thus far, firmly persevere in it. Wake.

To THWACK. v. a. [thaccian, Saxon.] To strike with something blunt and heavy; to thrash; to bang; to belabour. A ludicrous word.

He shall not stay;
We'll thwack him hence with distaffs. Shakspeare.

Nick fell foul upon John Bull, to snatch the cudgel he had in his hand, that he might thwack Lewis with it. Arbutnot.

These long fellows, as lightly as they are, should find their jackets well thwacked. Arbutnot.

THWACK. n. s. [from the verb.] A heavy hard blow.

But Talgot first with a hard thwack
Twice bruised his head, and twice his back. Hudibras.

They place several pots of rice, with cudgels in the neighbourhood of each pot; the monkeys descend from the trees, take up the arms, and belabour one another with a storm of thwacks. Addison.

THWART. adj. [thwyrn, Sax. dwar, Dut.]

1. Transverse; cross to something else.

This else to several spheres thou must ascribe,
Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities. Milton.

Yon stream of light, a thousand ways
Upward and downward thwarting and convolv'd. Thomson.

2. To cross; to oppose; to traverse; to contravene.

Some sixteen months and longer might have staid,
If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. Shakspeare.

The thwartings of your dispositions, if You had not shew'd how you were dispos'd
Ere they lack power to cross you. Shakspeare.

The understanding and will then never disagreed;
for the proposals of the one never thwarted the inclinations of the other. South.

The rays both good and bad, of equal pow'r,
Each thwarting other made a mingled hour. Dryden.

In vain did I the godlike youth deplore:
The more I begg'd, they thwarted me the more. Addison.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain,
Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain. Pope.

By thwarting passions tost, by cares oppress'd,
He found the tempest pictur'd in his breast. Young.

To THWART. v. n. To be in opposition to.

It is easy to be imagined what reception any proposition shall find, that shall at all thwart with these internal oracles. Locke.

are departed from thee. Revelations.

THYME. n. s. [thym, Fr. thymus, Lat.]

A plant.
The thyme hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whose upper-lip is erect, and generally split in two, and the under-lip is divided into three parts; out of the flower-cup arises the pointal, accompanied by four embryos, which afterward become so many seeds, inclosed in a husk, which before was the flower-cup; to these marks must be added hard ligneous stalks, and the flowers gathered into heads. Miller.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme. Dryd.

THYSE'LF. pronoun reciprocal. [thy and self.]

1. It is commonly used in the oblique cases, or following the verb.

Come high or low,
Thyself and office desitly show. Shakspeare.

2. In poetical or solemn language it is sometimes used in the nominative.

These goods thyself can on thyself bestow. Dryden.

TI'AR. } n. s. [tiare, Fr. tiara, Lat.] A dress for the head; a diadem.

His back was turn'd, but not his brightness hid;
Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar
Circled his head. Milton.

This royal robe and this tiara wore Old Priam, and this golden sceptre bore
In full assemblies. Dryden.

A tiar wreath'd her head with many a fold,
Her waist was circled with a zone of gold. Pope.

Fairer she seem'd, distinguish'd from the rest,
And better mien disclos'd, as better dress'd:
A bright tiara round her forehead ty'd
To juster bounds confin'd its rising pride. Prior.

To TICE. v. a. [from entice.] To draw; to allure.

Lovely enchanting language, sugar-cane,
Honey of roses, whither wilt thou fly?

Hath some fond lover tic'd thee to thy bane?
And wilt thou leave the church, and love a fly? Herbert.

TICK. n. s. [This word seems contracted from ticket, a tally on which debts are scored.]

1. Score; trust.

If thou hast the heart to try 't,
I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,
And once more for that carcase vile Fight upon tick. Hudibras.

When the money is got into hands that have bought all that they have need of, whoever needs any thing else must go on tick, or barter for it. Locke.

You would see him in the kitchen weighing the beef and butter, paying ready money, that the maids might not run a tick at the market. Arbutnot.

2. [tique, Fr. teke, Dut.] The louse of dogs or sheep.

Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance. Shakspeare.

3. The case which holds the feathers of a bed.

To TICK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run on score.

2. To trust; to score.

The money went to the lawyers; council wo'n't tick. Arbutnot.

Can tickle where she wounds! Shakspeare.

The mind is moved in great vehemency only by tickling some parts of the body. Bacon.

There is a sweetness in good verse, which tickles even while it hurts; and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him against his will. Dryden.

It is a good thing to laugh at any rate; and if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness. Dryden.

2. To please by slight gratifications.

Dametas, that of all manners of stile could best conceive of golden eloquence, being withal tickled by Musidorus's praises, had his brain so turned, that he became slave to that which he that sued to be his servant offered to give him. Sidney.

Expectation tickling skittish spirits,
Sets all on hazard. Shakspeare.

Such a nature
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which it treads on at noon. Shakspeare.

I cannot rule my spleen;
My scorn rebels, and tickles me within. Dryden.

Dunce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd
To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryden.

A drunkard the habitual thirst after his cups drives to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health, and perhaps of the joys of another life, the least of which is such a good as he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine. Locke.

To TI'CKLE. v. n. To feel titillation.

He with secret joy therefore Did tickle inwardly in every vein,
And his false heart, fraught with all treason's store,
Was fill'd with hope his purpose to obtain. Spenser.

TI'CKLE. adj. [I know not whence to deduce the sense of this word.] Tottering; unfixed; unstable; easily overthrown.

When the last O Neal began to stand upon some tickle terms, this fellow, called baron of Dunganon, was set up to beard him. Spenser.

Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off Shakspeare.

The state of Normandy Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone. Shakspeare.

TI'CKLISH. adj. [from tickle.]

1. Sensible to titillation; easily tickled.

The palm of the hand, though it hath as thin a skin as the other parts, yet is not ticklish, because it is accustomed to be touched. Bacon.

2. Tottering; uncertain; unfixed.

Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state, more easy to receive distempers and mutations than England was. Bacon.

Did it stand upon so ticklish and tottering a foundation as some men's fancy hath placed it, it would be no wonder should it frequently vary. Woodward.

3. Difficult; nice.

How shall our author hope a gentle fate,
Who dares most impudently not translate?
It had been civil, in these ticklish times,
To fetch his fools and knaves from foreign climes. Swift.

TI'CKLISHNESS. n. s. [from ticklish.] The state of being ticklish.

TI'CKTACK. n. s. [tricktrac, Fr.] A game at tables. Bailey.

From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide. Spenser.

They two forth passing
Received those two fair brides, their love's delight,
Which, at the appointed tide,
Each one did make his bride. Spenser.

T I D

What hath this day deserv'd,
That in it golden letter should be set
Among the high tides in the kalendar? Shakspeare.
At new-year's tide following, the king chose him master of the horse. Wotton.

2. Alternate ebb and flow of the sea.

That motion of the water called tides, is a rising and falling of the sea: the cause of this is the attraction of the moon, whereby the part of the water in the great ocean which is nearest the moon, being most strongly attracted, is raised higher than the rest; and the part opposite to it being least attracted, is also higher than the rest; and these two opposite ridges of the surface of the water in the great ocean following the motion of the moon from east to west, and striking against the large coasts of the continents, from whence rebound back again, and so make floods and ebbs in narrow seas and rivers.
Locke.

3. Commotion; violent confluence.

As in the tides of people once up, there want not stirring winds to make them more rough, so this people did light upon two ringleaders. Bacon.

4. Stream; course.

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times. Shakspeare.
The rapid currents drive
Towards the retreating sea their furious tide.
Milton.

But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the sea in tributary tides,
Be bribe sufficient to corrupt thy breast,
Or violate with dreams thy peaceful rest. Dryden.

Continual tide
Flows from th' exhilarating fount. Philips.

To TIDE. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive with the stream.

Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the naked poop, are tided back
By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore.
Dryden.

To TIDE. v. n. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the tide.

When from his dint the foe still backward shrunk,
Wading within the Ouse, he dealt his blows,
And sent them, rolling, to the tidings Humber.
Philips.

men; nothing left for Irishmen but vicarages and tidewaiters places. Swift.

TIDILY. adv. [from tidy.] Neatly; readily.

TIDINESS. n. f. [from tidy.] Neatness; readiness.

TIDINGS. n. f. [tidan, Saxon, to happen, to betide; tidende, Islandick.] News; an account of something that has happened; incidents related.

When her eyes she on the dwarf had set,
And saw the signs that deadly tidings spake,
She fell to ground for sorrowful regret. Spenser.
I shall make my master glad with these tidings.
Shakspeare.

They win
Great numbers of each nation to receive,
With joy, the tidings brought from heav'n.
Milton.

Portius, thy looks speak somewhat of importance:
What tidings doth thou bring? methinks I see Unusual gladness sparkling in thy eyes. Addison.

The messenger of these glad tidings, by whom this covenant of mercy was proposed and ratified, was the eternal Son of his bosom. Rogers.

T I E

TIDY. adj. [tidt, Islandick.]

Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay.

3. It seems to be here put by mistake or irony for untidy.

Thou whorson tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting? Shakspeare.

To TIE. v. a. [tīan, tīgan, Saxon.]

1. To bind; to fasten with a knot.

Tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them. Samuel.

Thousands of men and women, tied together in chains, were, by the cruel Turks, enforced to run as fast as their horses. Knolles.

2. To knit; to complicate.

We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument; but the harder it is tied, we shall feel the pleasure more sensibly when we come to loose it. Burnet.

3. To hold; to fasten; to join so as not easily to be parted.

In bond of virtuous love together tied,
Together serv'd they, and together died. Fairfax.
The intermediate ideas tie the extremes so firmly together, and the probability is so clear, that assent necessarily follows it. Locke.

Certain theorems resolve propositions which depend on them, and are as firmly made out from thence, as if the mind went afresh over every link of the whole chain that ties them to first self-evident principles. Locke.

4. To hinder; to obstruct: with up intensive.

Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me
wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak.
Shakspeare.

Melantius, stay,
You have my promise; and my hasty word
Restrains my tongue, but ties not up my sword.
Waller.

Honour and good-nature may tie up his hands;
but as these would be very much strengthened by reason and principle, so without them they are only instincts. Addison.

5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain; to confine.

Although they profess they agree with us touching a precept form of prayer to be used in the church, they have declared that it shall not be prescribed as a thing whereunto they will tie their ministers. Hooker.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs
Which tie him to an answer. Shakspeare.

Cannot God make any of the appropriate acts of worship to become due only to himself? cannot he tie us to perform them to him? Stillington.

They tie themselves so strictly to unity of place, that you never see in any of their plays a scene change in the middle of an act. Dryden.

Not tied to rules of policy, you find Revenge less sweet than a forgiving mind. Dryden.
No one seems less tied up to a form of words.
Locke.

The mind should, by several rules, be tied down to this, at first, uneasy task; use will give it facility. Locke.

They have no uneasy expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the present moment.
Atterbury.

A healthy man ought not to tie himself up to strict rules, nor to abstain from any sort of food in common use. Arbuthnot.

6. It may be observed of tie, that it has often the particles up and down joined to it, which are, for the most part, little more than emphatical, and which, when united with this word, have at least con-sequentially the same meaning.

TIE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Knot; fastening.

T I G

2. Bond; obligation.

The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the lesser tie of respect. Bacon.

No forest, cave, or savage den
Holds more pernicious beasts than men;
Vows, oaths, and contracts they devise,
And tell us they are sacred ties. Waller.

3. A knot of hair.

The well-sworn ties an equal homage claim,
And either shoulder has its share of fame. Young.

Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood. Shakspeare.
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble. Shakspeare.

Has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
E'er plow'd for him? Thomson.

TIGHT. adj. [dicht, Dutch.]

1. Tense; close; not loose.

If the centre holes be not very deep, and the pikes fill them not very tight, the strength of the string will alter the centre holes. Moxon.

I do not like this running knot, it holds too tight; I may be stifled all of a sudden. Arbuthnot.

Every joint was well grooved; and the door did not move on hinges, but up and down like a sash, which kept my closet so tight that very little water came in. Swift.

2. Free from fluttering rags; less than neat.

A tight maid, ere he for wine can ask,
Guesses his meaning, and unrolls the flask. Dryden.

Such as might save my sheep and me from shame.
Spenser.
For the body of the ships no nation doth equal England for the oaken timber wherewith to build them; but there must be a great providence used, that our ship timber be not unnecessarily wasted.
Bacon.
The straw was laid below,
Of chips and serewood was the second row;
The third of greens, and timber newly fell'd.
Dryden.
There are hardly any countries that are destitute of timber of their own growth. Woodward.
Upon these walls they plant quick and timber trees, which thrive exceedingly. Mortimer.

 1. The measure of duration.

T I M

- This consideration of duration, as set out by certain periods, and marked by certain measures or epochs, is that which most properly we call time.
Locke.
- Time* is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand,
But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps the incomer. Shakspeare.
Come what come may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.
Shakspeare.
- Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross exhalation, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scale. Brown.
- Time*, which consisteth of parts, can be no part of infinite duration, or of eternity; for then there would be infinite time past to-day, which to-morrow will be more than infinite. Time is one thing, and infinite duration is another. Grew.
2. Space of time.
Daniel desired that he would give him time, and that he would shew him the interpretation. Daniel.
If a law be enacted to continue for a certain time, when that time is elapsed, the law ceaseth without any farther abrogation. White.
He for the time remained stupidly good. Milton.

tion was overflowed with a flood. Job.
He found nothing but leaves on it; for the time of figs was not yet. Mark.
Knowing the time, that it is high time to awake out of sleep. Romans.
Short were her marriage joys; for in the prime
Of youth her lord expir'd before his time. Dryden.
I hope I come in time, if not to make,
At least to save, your fortune and your honour.
Dryden.
The time will come when we shall be forced to bring our evil ways to remembrance, and then consideration will do us little good. Calamy.
 6. A considerable space of duration; continuance; process of time.
Fight under him, there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade:
And when in service your best days are spent,
In time you may command a regiment. Dryden.
In time the mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, ideas of reflection.
Locke.
One imagines, that the terrestrial matter which is showered down along with rain enlarges the bulk of the earth, and that it will in time bury all things under ground. Woodward.
I have resolved to take time, and, in spite of all misfortunes, to write you, at intervals, a long letter.
Swift.
 7. Age; part of duration distinct from other parts.
They shall be given into his hand until a time and times. Daniel.
If we should impute the heat of the season to the co-operation of any stars with the sun, it seems more favourable for our times to ascribe the same unto the constellation of Leo. Brown.
The way to please being to imitate nature, the poets and the painters, in ancient times, and in the best ages, have studied her. Dryden.
 8. Past time.
I was the man in th' moon when time was.
Shakspeare.
 9. Early time.

T I M

- Stanley at Bosworth-field, though he came time enough to save his life, yet he staid long enough to endanger it. Bacon.
If they acknowledge repentance and a more strict obedience to be one time or other necessary, they imagine it is time enough yet to set about these duties. Rogers.
10. Time considered as affording opportunity.
The earl lost no time, but marched day and night.
Clarendon.
He continued his delights till all the enemies horse were passed through his quarters; nor did then pursue them in any time. Clarendon.
I would ask any man that means to repent at his death, how he knows he shall have an hour's time for it? Duty of Man.
Time is lost, which never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue, Surveying nature. Dryden.

will not bear such a practice, that is an answer from the mouth of a professed time-server. South.
 12. Particular time.
Give order, that no sort of person
Have, any time, recourse unto the princes. Shakspeare.
When that company died, what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men. Numbers.
The worst on me must light, when time shall be.
Milton.
A time will come, when my maturer muse
In Cæsar's wars a nobler theme shall chuse.
Dryden.
These reservoirs of snow they cut, distributing them to several shops, that from time to time supply Naples. Addison.
 13. Hour of childbirth.
She intended to stay till delivered; for she was within one month of her time. Clarendon.
The first time I saw a lady dressed in one of these petticoats, I blamed her for walking abroad when she was so near her time; but soon I found all the modish part of the sex as far gone as herself.
SpeEtator.
 14. Repetition of any thing, or mention with reference to repetition.
Four times he cross'd the car of night. Milton.
Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finished. Heylin.
Every single particle would have a sphere of void space around it many hundred thousand million million times bigger than the dimensions of that particle. Bentley.
Lord Oxford, I have now the third time mentioned in this letter, expects you. Swift.

Can make that song which was but rhyme. Waller.
On their exalted wings
To the celestial orbs they climb,
And with th' harmonious spheres keep time.
Denham.
Heroes who o'ercome, or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which in battle's heat
Against their very corslets beat;
Keep time with their own trumpet's measure,
And yield them most excessive pleasure. Prior.
 - To TIME. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To adapt to the time; to bring or do at a proper time.
There is no greater wisdom than well to time the beginnings and onsets of things. Bacon.
It is hard to believe, that where his most numerous miracles were afforded, they should all want the advantage of the congruous timings to give them their due weight and efficacy. Hammond.

The timing of things is a main point in the dispatch of all affairs. L'Estrange.

This 'tis to have a virtue out of season : Mercy is good, but kings mistake its timing. Dryden.

A man's conviction should be strong, and so well timed, that worldly advantages may seem to have no share in it. Addison.

2. To regulate as to time.

To the same purpose old Epopeus spoke,
Who overlook'd the oars, and tim'd the stroke. Addison.

3. To measure harmonically.

T I N

The infant flames, whilst yet they were conceal'd
In tim'rous doubts, with pity I beheld;
With easy smiles dispell'd the silent fear,
That durst not tell me what I dy'd to hear. Prior.

TIMOROUSLY. adv. [from timorous.] Fearfully; with much fear.

We would have had you heard
The traitor speak, and tim'rously confess
The manner and the purpose of his treasons. Shakspeare.

Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, and metal from wood, yet they but timorously ventured on such terms which should pretend to signify their real essences. Locke.

Let dastard souls be timorously wise:
But tell them, Pyrrhus knows not how to form Far-fancy'd ills, and dangers out of fight. A. Philips.

TIMOROUSNESS. n. s. [from timorous.] Fearfulness.

The clergy, through the timorousness of many among them, were refused to be heard by their council. Swift.

TIMOUS. adj. [from time.] Early; timely; not innate. Obsolete.

By a wife and timous inquisition, the peccant humours and humourists must be discovered, purged, or cut off. Bacon.

Woodward.

To TINCT. v. a. [tinctus, Lat. teint, Fr.]

1. To stain; to colour; to spot; to die.

Some bodies have a more departible nature than others in colouration; for a small quantity of saffron will tinct more than a very great quantity of wine. Bacon.

Some were tincted blue, some red, others yellow.
Brown.

I distilled some of the tincted liquor, and all that came over was as limpid as rock water. Boyle.

Those who have preserved an innocence, would not suffer the whiter parts of their soul to be discoloured or tincted by the reflection of one sin.
Decay of Piety.

2. To imbue with a taste.

We have artificial wells made in imitation of the natural, as tincted upon vitriol, sulphur, and steel.
Bacon.

TINCT. n. s. [from the verb.] Colour; stain; spot.

The purple-streaming amethyst is thine. Thomson.

TINCTURE. n. s. [teinture, Fr. tinctura, from tinctus, Lat.]

1. Colour or taste superadded by something.

The sight must be sweetly deceived by an insensible passage from bright colours to dimmer, which Italian artizans call the middle tinctures. Wotton.

Hence the morning planet gilds her horn.
By tincture or reflection they augment Their small peculiar. Milton.

T I N

'Tis the fate of princes, that no knowledge
Come pure to them, but, passing through the eyes
And ears of other men, it takes a tincture
From every channel. Denham.

That beloved thing engrosses him, and, like a coloured glass before his eyes, casts its own colour and tincture upon all the images of things. South.

To begin the practice of an art with a light tinc- ture of the rules, is to expose ourselves to the scorn of those who are judges. Dryden.

Malignant tempers, whatever kind of life they are engaged in, will discover their natural tincture of mind. Addison.

Few in the next generation who will not write and read, and have an early tincture of religion.
Addison.

Sire of her joy, and source of her delight!
O! wing'd with pleasure, take thy happy flight,
And give each future morn a tincture of thy white. Prior.

All manners take a tincture from our own,
Or come discolour'd through our passions shown. Prior.

Have a care lest some darling science so far prevail over your mind, as to give a sovereign tincture to all your other studies, and discolour all your ideas. Watts.

2. Extract of some drug made in spirits.

In tinctures drawn from vegetables, the super-of the vegetable. Boyle.

To TINCTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To imbue or impregnate with some colour or taste.

The bright sun compacts the precious stone,
Imparting radiant lustre like his own:
He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue. Blackmore.

A little black paint will tincture and spoil twenty gay colours. Watts.

2. To imbue the mind.

Early were our minds tinctured with a distinguishing sense of good and evil; early were the seeds of a divine love, and holy fear of offending, sown in our hearts. Atterbury.

To TIND. v. a. [tendgan, Gothick; tendan, Sax.] To kindle; to set on fire.

TINDER. n. s. [t  ndne, tendne, Saxon.] Any thing eminently inflammable placed to catch fire.

Strike on the tinder, ho!
Give me a taper. Shakspeare.

To these shameless pastimes were their youth admitted, thereby adding, as it were, fire to tinder.
Hakewill.

Where sparks and fire do meet with tinder,
Those sparks more fire will still engender. Suckling.

Whoever our trading with England would hinder,
To inflame both the nations do plainly conspire;
Because Irish linen will soon turn to tinder,
And wool it is greasy, and quickly takes fire. Swift.

TINDERBOX. n. s. [tinder and box.] The box for holding tinder.

That worthy patriot, once the bellows
And tinderbox of all his fellows. Hudibras.

catching moles, making lanterns and tinderboxes. Atterbury.

TINE. n. s. [tinne, Islandick.]

1. The tooth of a harrow; the spike of a fork.

In the southern parts of England they destroy moles by traps that fall on them, and strike sharp tines or teeth through them. Mortimer.

2. Trouble; distress.

The tragical effect,
Vouchsafe, O thou the mournful'st muse of nine,
That wont'st the tragick stage for to direct,
In funeral complaints and wailful tine. Spenser.

To TINE. v. a. [t  nan, Sax.]

1. To kindle; to light; to set on fire.

T I N

Strifeful Atin in their stubborn mind
Coals of contention and hot vengeance tin'd.
Spenser.

The clouds
Juffling or push'd with winds, rude in their shock, Tine the flant lightning; whose thwart flame driv'n down,
Kindles the gummy bark of fir. Milton.
The priest with holy hands was seen to tine
The cloven wood, and pour the ruddy wine. Dryden.

2. [tinan, Saxon.] To shut.

To TINE. v. n.

1. To rage; to smart. Spenser.

Of Scots and English both, that tined on his strand.
Spenser.

To TINGE. v. a. [tingo, Latin.] To im-pregnate or imbue with a colour or taste.

Sir Roger is something of an humourist; and his virtues, as well as imperfections, are tinged by a certain extravagance, which makes them particularly his. Spectator.

A red powder mixed with a little blue, or a blue with a little red, doth not presently lose its colour;
but a white powder mixed with any colour is presently tinged with that colour, and is equally capable of being tinged with any colour whatever. Newton.

If the eye be tinged with any colour, as in the jaundice, so as to tinge pictures in the bottom of the eye with that colour, all objects appear tinged with the same colour. Newton.

She lays some useful bile aside,
To tinge the chyle's insipid tide;
Else we should want both gibe and satire,
And all be burst with pure good-nature. Prior.
The infusions of rhubarb and saffron tinge the urine with a high yellow. Arbuthnot.

To TINGENT. adj. [tingens, Latin.] Having the power to tinge.

This wood, by the tincture it afforded, appeared to have its coloured part genuine; but as for the white part, it appears much less enriched with the tingent property. Boyle.

To TINGLASS. n. f. [tin and glass.] Bismuth.

To TINGLE. v. n. [tingelen, Dutch.]

1. To feel a sound, or the continuance of a sound, in the ears. This is perhaps rather tinkle.

The ears of them that hear it shall tingle. Bible.
When our ear tingleth, we usually say that somebody is talking of us; which is an ancient conceit. Brown.

2. To feel a sharp quick pain with a sensation of motion.

The pale boy senator yet tingling stands. Pope.

3. To feel either pain or pleasure with a sensation of motion. The sense of this word is not very well ascertained.

They suck pollution through their tingling veins. Tickel.

In a palsy, sometimes the sensation or feeling is either totally abolished, or dull with a sense of tingling. Arbuthnot.

To TINK. v. n. [tinnio, Latin; tincian, Welsh.] To make a sharp shrill noise.

To TINKER. n. f. [from tink, because their way of proclaiming their trade is to beat a kettle, or because in their work they make a tinkling noise.] A mender of old brags.

Am not I old Sly's son, by education a card-maker, and now by present profession a tinker? Shakspeare.

My copper medals by the pound
May be with learned justice weigh'd:
To turn the balance, Otho's head
May be thrown in; and for the mettle,
The coin may mend a tinker's kettle. Prior.

To TINKLE. v. n. [tinter, French; tinnio,
Latin.]

1. To make a sharp quick noise; to clink.

T I N

The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched out necks, making a tinkling with their feet. Isaiah.

His feeble hand a javelin threw,
Which flutt'ring, seem'd to loiter as it flew;
Just, and but barely, to the mark it held,
And faintly tinkled on the brazen shield. Dryden.

The sprightly horse
Moves to the musick of his tinkling bells. Dodgley.
2. It seems to have been improperly used by Pope.

The wand'ring streams that shine between the hills,

The grots that echo to the tinkling rills. Pope.

3. To hear a low quick noise.

With deeper brown the grove was overspread,
A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
And his ears tinkled, and the colour fled. Dryden.

To TINMAN. n. f. [tin and man.] A manufacturer of tin, or iron tinned over.

Didst thou never pop
Thy head into a tinman's shop? Prior.

To TINNER. n. f. [from tin; tin, Saxon.]
One who works in the tin mines.

The Cornish men, many of them could for a need live under ground, that were tinners. Bacon.

To TINNY. adj. [from tin.] Abounding with tin.

Those arms of sea that thrust into the tinny strand. Drayton.

To TINPENNY. n. f. A certain customary duty anciently paid to the tithingmen. Bailey.

To TINSEL. n. f. [etincelle, French.]

1. A kind of shining cloth.

A *tinse*l veil her amber locks did shroud,
That strove to cover what it could not hide. Fairfax.

It's but a night-gown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and cuts, underborne with a bluish *tinse*l. Shakspeare.

By Thetis *tinse*l slipper'd feet,
And the songs of sirens sweet. Milton.

2. Any thing shining with false lustre; any thing showy and of little value.

For favours cheap and common who would strive?
Yet scatter'd here and there I some behold,
Who can discern the *tinse*l from the gold. Dryden.
If the man will too curiously examine the superficial *tinse*l good, he undeceives himself to his own cost. Norris.

No glitt'ring *tinse*l of May-fair
Could with this rod of Sid compare. Swift.

Ye *tinse*l insects, whom a court maintains,
That count your beauties only by your stains,
Spin all your cobwebs o'er the eyes of day,
The muse's wing shall brush you all away. Pope.

To TINSEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with cheap ornaments; to adorn with lustre that has no value.

Hence, you phantastick postillers in song,
My text defeats your art, 'tis Nature's tongue,
Scorns all her *tinse*l'd metaphors of pelf,
Illustrated by nothing but herself. Cleaveland.

She, *tinse*l'd o'er in robes of varying hues,
With self-applause her wild creation views;
Sees momentary monsters rise and fall,
And with her own fool's colours gilds them all. Pope.

To TINT. n. f. [teinte, French; tinta, Ital.]
A die; a colour.

Whether thy hand strike out some free design,
Where life awakes, and dawns at ev'ry line;
Or blend in beauteous tint the colour'd mafs,
And from the canvas call the mimic face. Pope.

The virtues of most men will only blow,
Like coy auriculas, in Alpine snow;
Transplant them to the equinoctial line,
Their vigour sickens, and their tints decline. Harte.

Though it be allowed that elaborate harmony of colouring, a brilliancy of tints, a soft and gradual transition from one to another, present not to the eye what an harmonious concert of musick does to the ear; it must be remembered, that painting is not merely a gratification of sight. Reynolds.

T I P

To TINWORM. n. f. An insect. Bailey.

To TINY. adj. [tint, tynd, Danish.] Little;
small; puny. A burlesque word.

Any pretty little tiny kickshaws. Shakspeare.

When that I was a little tiny boy, Shakspeare.

A foolish thing was but a toy.

But ah! I fear thy little fancy roves
On little females, and on little loves;

Thy pigmy children, and thy tiny spouse,

The baby playthings that adorn thy house. Swift.

To TIP. n. f. [tip, tipken, Dutch.] Top;
end; point; extremity.

The tip no jewel needs to wear,

The tip is jewel of the ear. Sidney.

They touch the beard with the tip of their tongue.

and wet it. Bacon.

Thrice upon thy finger's tip.

Thrice upon thy rubied lip. Milton.

All the pleasure dwells upon the tip of his tongue. South.

She has fifty private amours, which nobody yet knows any thing of but herself, and thirty clandest-tine marriages, that have not been touched by the tip of the tongue. Addison.

I no longer look upon lord Plausible as ridiculous, for admiring a lady's fine tip of an ear and pretty elbow. Pope.

To TIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To top; to end; to cover on the end.

In his hand a reed

Stood waving, tipp'd with fire. Milton.

With truncheon tipp'd with iron head,

The warrior to the lists he led. Hudibras.

How would the old king smile

To see you weigh the paws, when tipp'd with gold,

And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders! Addison.

Quarto's, octavo's shape the lefs'ning pyre,

And last a little Ajax tips the spire. Pope.

Behold the place, where if a poet

Shin'd in description, he might show it;

Tell how the moon-beam trembling falls,

And tips with silver all the walls. Pope.

Tip with jet,

Fair ermines spotless as the snows they press. Thomson.

2. To strike slightly; to tap.

She writes love-letters to the youth in grace,

Nay, tips the wink before the cuckold's face. Dryden.

The pert jackanapes tipped me the wink, and put out his tongue at his grandfather. Tatler.

A third rogue tips me by the elbow. Swift.

Their judgment was, upon the whole,

That lady is the dullest soul;

Then tip their forehead in a jeer,

As who should say, she wants it here. Swift.

When I saw the keeper frown,

Tipping him with half a crown,

Now, said I, we are alone,

Name your heroes one by one. Swift.

To TIPPET. n. f. [tæppet, Saxon.] Something worn about the neck.

His turban was white, with a small red cross on the top: he had also a tippet of fine linnen. Bacon.

To TIPPLE. v. n. [tepel, a dug, old Teu-tonick.] To drink luxuriously; to waste life over the cup.

Let us grant it is not amiss to sit,
And keep the turn of tipping with a slave,
To reel the streets at noon. Shakspeare.

To TIPPLE. v. a. To drink in luxury or excess.

While his canting drone-pipe scann'd
The mystic figures of her hand,
He tipples palmetry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.

To a short meal he makes a tedious grace,

Before the barley-pudding comes in place;

Then bids fall on; himself for saving charges

A peel'd slic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden.

If a slumber haply does invade

My weary limbs, my fancy's still awake,

Thoughtful of drink, and eager, in a dream,

Tipples imaginary pots of ale. Philips.

TIPPLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Drink; liquor.

While the tipple was paid for, all went merrily on. L'Estrange.

TIPPLED. adj. [from tipple.] Tipsy; drunk.

One had in his hand a tipstaff of a yellow cane, tipped at both ends with blue. Bacon.

TIPSY. adj. [from tipple.] Drunk; overpowered with excess of drink.

The riot of the tipsy bacchanals,
Tearing the Thracian finger in their rage. Shakspeare.
Welcome joy and feast,
Midnight shout and revelry,
Tipsy dance and jollity. Milton.

TIPTOE. n. f. [tip and toe.] The end of the toe.

Where the fond ape himself uprearing high,
Upon his tiptoes stalketh stately by. Spenser.

He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tiptoe when this day is nam'd,

And rouse him at the name of Crispian. Shakspeare.

Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day Stands tiptoe on the misty mountains' tops. Shakspeare.

Religion stands on tiptoe in our land,
Ready to pass to the American strand. Herbert.

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tiptoes from the ground. Dryden.

TIRE. n. f. [tyr, Dutch.]

1. Rank; row. Sometimes written tier.
Your lowest tire of ordnance must lie four-foot clear above water, when all loading is in, or else those your best pieces will be of small use at sea, in any grown weather that makes the billows to rise. Raleigh.

Stood rank'd of seraphim another row,
In posture to displode their second tire
Of thunder. Milton.

In all those wars there were few triremes, most of them being of one tire of oars of fifty banks. Arbutnot.

2. [Corrupted from tiar or tiara, or from attire.] A headdress.

On her head she wore a tire of gold,
Adorn'd with gems and ouches. Spenser.

Here is her picture: let me see;
If I had such a tier, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers. Shakspeare.

The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
Now fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire,
And for his old fair robes of light he wears
A gloomy mantle of dark flame; the tire
That crowns his hated head, on high appears. Craslow.

When the fury took her stand on high,
A hiss from all the snaky tire went round. Pope.

3. Furniture; apparatus.

Saint George's worth
Enkindles like desire of high exploits:
Immediate sieges, and the tire of war
Rowl in thy eager mind. Philips.

When they first peep forth of the ground, they shew their whole tire of leaves, then flowers, next seeds. Woodward.

To TIRE. v. a. [tipian, Saxon.]

1. To fatigue; to make weary; to harass; to wear out with labour or tediousness.

Tir'd with toil, all hopes of safety past,
From pray'rs to wishes he descends at last. Dryden.

For this a hundred voices I desire,
To tell thee what a hundred tongues would tire;
Yet never could be worthily express,
How deeply thou art seated in my breast. Dryden.

2. It has often out added, to intend the signification.

Often a few that are stiff do tire out a greater number that are more moderate. Bacon.

A lonely way

The cheerless Albion wander'd half a day;
Tir'd out, at length a spreading stream he spy'd. Tickel.

3. [from attire or tire, from tiara.] To dress the head.

Jezebel painted her face, and tired her head. 2 Kings.

To TIRE. v. n. [teonian, Saxon.] To fail with weariness.

TIREDNESS. n. f. [from tired.] State of being tired; weariness.

It is not through the tiredness of the age of the earth, but through our own negligence, that it hath not satisfied us bountifully. Hakewill.

TI'RESOME. adj. [from tire.] Wearisome; fatiguing; tedious.

Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome to the reader, the poet must sometimes relieve the subject with a pleasant and pertinent digression. Addison.

Nothing is so tiresome as the works of those critics who write in a dogmatick way, without language, genius, or imagination. Addison.

TI'RESOMENESS. n. f. [from tiresome.]

Act or quality of being tiresome.

TI'REWOMAN. n. f. [tire and woman.]

A woman whose business is to make dresses for the head.

Why should they not value themselves for this outside fashionableness of the tirewoman's making, when their parents have so early instructed them to do so. Locke.

TI'RINGHOUSE. n. f. [tire and house, or

TI'RINGROOM. n. f. [room.] The room in which players dress for the stage.

This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn brake our tiringhouse. Shakspeare.

Man's life's a tragedy; his mother's womb,
From which he enters, is the tiringroom;

This spacious earth the theatre, and the stage
That country which he lives in; passions, rage,
Folly, and vice, are actors. Wotton.

TI'RWIT. n. f. [vanellus, Latin.] A bird.

Ainsworth.

Tis. Contracted for it is,

'Tis destiny unshunnable. Shakspeare.

TI'SSUE. n. f. [tissue, French; tiſan, to weave, Norman Saxon.] Cloth interwoven with gold or silver, or figured colours.

In their glittering tissues emblaz'd
Holy memorials, acts of zeal and love, Recorded eminent. Milton.

A robe of tissue, stiff with golden wire;
An upper vest, once Helen's rich attire;
From Argos by the fam'd adulteress brought,
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought. Dryden.

To TI'SSUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To interweave; to variegate.

The chariot was covered with cloth of gold tissued upon blue. Bacon.

They have been always frank of their blessings to countenance any great action; and then, according as it should prosper, to tissue upon it some pretence or other. Wotton.

Mercy will sit between,
Thron'd in celestial sheen,
With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering. Milton.

TIT. n. f.

1. A small horse: generally in contempt.
No storing of pasture with baggagely tit,
With ragged, with aged, and evil at hit. Tusser.

Thou might'st have ta'en example
From what thou read'st in story;
Being as worthy to sit
On an ambling tit
As thy predecessor Dory. Denham.

2. A woman: in contempt.

What does this envious tit, but away to her father with a tale? L'Estrange.

A willing tit that will venture her corps with you. Dryden.

Short pains for thee, for me a son and heir.
Girls cost as many throes in bringing forth;
Beside, when born, the tits are little worth. Dryden.

3. A titmouse or tomtit. [parus, Latin.] A bird.

TITBIT. n. f. [properly tidbit; tid, tender, and bit.] Nice bit; nice food.

TITHE. n. f. [teoða, Saxon, tenib.]

1. The tenth part; the part assigned to the maintenance of the ministry.

Many have made witty invectives against usury: they say, that it is a pity the devil should have God's part, which is the tithe. Bacon.

Sometimes comes she with a tithe pig's tail,
Tickling the parson as he lies asleep,
Then dreams he of another benefice. Shakspeare.

2. The tenth part of any thing.

I have searched man by man, boy by boy; the tithe of a hair was never lost in my house before. Shakspeare.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
Ev'ry tithe soul 'mongst many thousand dimes
Hath been as dear as Helen. Shakspeare.

3. Small part; small portion, unless it be misprinted for titles.

Offensive wars for religion are seldom to be approved, unless they have some mixture of civil tithe. Bacon.

To TITHE. v. a. [teoðian, Saxon.] To tax; to levy the tenth part.

When I come to the titthing of them, I will tithe them one with another, and will make an Irishman the titthingman. Spenser.

By decimation and a tithe death,
If thy revenges hunger for that food
Which nature loaths, take thou the destin'd tenth. Shakspeare.

When thou hast made an end of titthing all the tithes of thine increase, the third year, the year of titthing, give unto the Levite, stranger, fatherless, and widow. Deuteronomy.

To TITHE. v. n. To pay tithe.

For lambe, pig, and calf, and for other the like,
Tithe so as thy cattle the lord do not strike. Tusser.

TITHEABLE. adj. [from tithe.] Subject to the payment of tithes; that of which tithes may be taken.

The popish priest shall, on taking the oath of allegiance to his majesty, be entitled to a tenth part or tithe of all things titheable in Ireland belonging to the papists, within their respective parishes. Swift.

TITHER. n. f. [from tithe.] One who gathers tithes.

TITTHING. n. f. [titthinga, law Latin, from tithe.]

1. Titthing is the number or company of ten men with their families knit together in a society, all of them being bound to the king for the peaceable and good behaviour of each of their society: of these companies there was one chief person, who, from his office, was called (tooth-thingman) titthingman; but now he is nothing but a constable. Corwell.

Poor Tom, who is whipt from titthing to titthing, and stock punished and imprisoned. Shakspeare.

2. Tithe; tenth part due to the priest.

Though vicar be bad, or the parson be evil,
Go not for thy titthing thyself to the devil. Tusser.

TITTHINGMAN. n. f. [titthing and man.]

Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth.
Shakespeare.

TORTOISE. n. f. [tortue, Fr.]

1. An animal covered with a hard shell:
there are tortoises both of land and water.
In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuffed. Shakespeare.

A living tortoise being turned upon its back, not being able to make use of its paws for the returning of itself, because they could only bend towards the belly, it could help itself only by its neck and head; sometimes one side, sometimes another, by pushing against the ground, to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out where the inequality of the ground might permit it to roll its shell. Ray.

2. A form into which the ancient soldiers used to throw their troops, by bending down, and holding their bucklers above their heads so that no darts could hurt them.

Their targets in a tortoise cast, the foes
Secure advancing to the turrets rose. Dryden.

TORTUOSITY. n. f. [from tortuosus.]

Curl'd many a wanton wreath. Milton.

Aqueous vapours, like a dry wind, pass through so long and tortuous a pipe of lead. Boyle.

2. Mischievous. [Thus I explain it, on supposition that it is derived from tort, wrong; but it may mean crooked: as we say, crooked ways for bad practices, crooked being regularly enough opposite to right.
This in some copies is tortious, and therefore from tort.]

Ne ought he car'd whom he damaged
By tortuous wrong, or whom bereav'd of right.
Spenser.

TORTURE. n. f. [torture, Fr. tortura,
Latin.]

tortures; tormentor.

I play the torturer by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken.
Shakespeare.

When king Edward the second was amongst his torturers, the more to disgrace his face, they shaved him, and washed him with cold water; the king said, Well, yet I will have warm water, and so shed abundance of tears. Bacon.

TORTVITY. n. f. [torvitas, Lat.] Sour-ness; severity of countenance. Not used.

TORTVOUS. adj. [torvus, Lat.] Sour of aspect; stern; severe of countenance.
Not used.

That torvous frow look produced by anger, and that gay and pleasing countenance accompanying love. Derham.

TORY. n. f. [A cant term, derived, I suppose, from an Irish word signifying a savage.] One who adheres to the ancient constitution of the state, and the apostolical hierarchy of the church of England: opposed to a whig.

The knight is more a tory in the country than the town, because it more advances his interest.
Addison.

This protestant zealot, this English divine,
In church and in state was of principles sound;
Was truer than steel to the Hanover line,
And griev'd that a tory should live above ground.
Swift.

To confound his hated coin,
All parties and religions join,
Whigs, torries. Swift.

TO TOSE. v. n. [of the same original with

In the middle of the bridge there is a draw-bridge made with such artifice, that the sentinel discovering any force approaching may, by only touching a certain iron with his foot, draw up the bridge. Brown.

3. To reach with any thing, so as that there be no space between the thing reached and the thing brought to it.

He brake the withs as a thread of tow is broken when it toucheth the fire. Judges.

Him thus intent, Ithuriel with his spear Touch'd lightly. Milton.

4. To come to; to attain.
Their impious folly dar'd to prey
On herds devoted to the god of day;
The god vindictive doom'd them, never more,
Ah men unblest'd! to touch their natal shore. Pope.

5. To try, as gold with a stone.
When I have suit,
Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed,
It shall be full of poize and difficulty,
And fearful to be granted. Shakspeare.

Words so debas'd and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on. Hudibras.

6 To relate to.
In ancient times was publicly read first the scripture, as, namely, something out of the books of the prophets of God; some things out of the apostles writings; and, lastly, out of the holy evangelists, some things which touched the person of our Lord Jesus Christ. Hooker.

The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then. Shakspeare.

space between the things reaching and reached.

No falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness. Milton.

2. The sense of feeling.

O dear son Edgar,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again. Shakspeare.

The spirit of wine, or chemical oils, which are so hot in operation, are to the first touch cold. Bacon.

By touch the first pure qualities we learn,
Which quicken all things, hot, cold, moist and dry;
By touch, hard, soft, rough, smooth, we do discern;

By touch, sweet pleasure and sharp pain we try. Darwin.

The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.
The fifth sense is touch, a sense over the whole body. Locke.

3. The act of touching.

The touch of the cold water made a pretty kind of shuddering come over her body, like the twinkling of the fairest among the fixed stars. Sidney.

With one virtuous touch
Th' arch-chemick sun produces precious things. Milton.

4. State of being touched.

The time was once, when thou unurg'd wouldst
vow,

That never touch was welcome to thy hand,
Unless I touch'd. Shakspeare.

5. Examination, as by a stone.

To-morrow, good sir Michell, is a day
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men Must bide the touch. Shakspeare.

Ah Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,

To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakspeare.

My friends of noble touch! when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. Shakspeare.

8. [touche, Fr.] Single act of a pencil upon the picture.

Artificial strife
Lives in those touches, livelier than life. Shakspeare.

It will be the more difficult for him to conceive when he has only a relation given him, without the nice touches which make the graces of the picture. Dryden.

Never give the least touch with your pencil, till you have well examined your design. Dryden.

9. Feature; lineament.

Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heav'nly synod was devis'd?
Of many faces, eyes and hearts,

To have the touches dearest priz'd. Shakspeare.
A son was copy'd from his voice so much,
The very same in ev'ry little touch. Dryden.

10. Act of the hand upon a musical instrument.

Here let the sounds of musick
Creep in our ears; soft stilness and the night Become the touches of sweet harmony. Shakspeare.

Nor wanted power to mitigate and swage,
With solemn touches, troubled thoughts. Milton.

11. Power of exciting the affections.

Not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak t' us. Shakspeare.

12. Something of passion or affection.

He which without our nature could not on earth suffer for the world, doth now also, by means thereof, both make intercession to God for sinners, and exercise dominion over all men, with a true, natural, and a sensible touch of mercy. Hooker.

He loves us not:

He wants the natural touch. Shakspeare.

13. Particular relation.

Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. Bacon.

14. [touche, Fr.] A stroke.

Our kings no sooner fall out, but their mints make war upon one another; one meets sometimes with very nice touches of raillery. Addison.

Another smart touch of the author we meet with in the fifth page, where, without any preparation, he breaks out all on a sudden into a vein of poetry. Addison.

Though its error may be such,

As Knags and Burges's cannot hit,

It yet may feel the nicer touch

Of Wicherley's or Congreve's wit. Prior.

He gave the little wealth he had

To build a house for fools and mad;

To shew by one satirick touch,

No nation wanted it so much. Swift.

Shakspeare.

Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a furling maze. Milton.

Tow'ring his height, and ample was his breast.
Dryden.

The crooked plough, the share, the tow'ring height

Of waggons, and the cart's unwieldy weight;
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden.

All those sublime thoughts which tower above the clouds, and reach as high as heaven itself, take their rise not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered for the contemplation of the mind. Locke.

To'WER-MUSTARD. n. f. [turritis, Lat.]
A plant. Miller.

To'WERED. adj. [from tower.] Adorned

1. A petty commodity; a trifle; a thing of no value.

Might I make acceptable unto her that toy which I had found, following an acquaintance of mine at the plough. Sidney.

They exchange for knives, glasses, and such toys, great abundance of gold and pearl. Abbot.

Because of old

Thou thyself doat'st on womankind, admiring
Their shape, their colour, and attractive grace.
None are, thou think'st, but taken with such toys.
Milton.

O virtue! virtue! what art thou become,
That men should leave thee for that toy a woman!
Dryden.

2. A plaything; a bauble.

To dally thus with death is no fit toy:

Go find some other play-fellows, mine own sweet boy. Spenser.

What a profusion of wealth laid out in coaches, trappings, tables, cabinets, and the like precious toys! Addison.

In Delia's hand this toy is fatal found,
Nor could that fabled dart more surely wound. Pope.

We smile at florists, we despise their joy,
And think their hearts enamour'd of a toy. Young.

3. Matter of no importance.

'Tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a babby's cap. Shakspeare.

High and noble things I slightly may not tell,
Nor light and idle toys my lines may vainly swell.
Drayton.

4. Folly; trifling practice; silly opinion.

The things which so long experience of all ages hath confirmed and made profitable, let us not presume to condemn as follies and toys, because we sometimes know not the cause and reason of them.
Hooker.

TRA

5. Play; sport; amorous dalliance.
Ye sons of Venus, play your sports at will;
For greedy pleasure, careless of your toys,
Thinks more upon her paradise of joys. Spenser.
So said he, and forbore not glance or toy
Of amorous intent. Milton.
6. Odd story; silly tale.
I never may believe
These antick fables, nor these fairy toys. Shaksp.
7. Slight representation.
Shall that which hath always received his construction,
be now disguised with a toy of novelty? Hooker.
8. Wild fancy; irregular imagery; odd conceit.
The very place puts toys of desperation,
Without more motive, into every brain,
That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath. Shaksp.
- TO TOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle;
to dally amorously; to play.
- TO'YISH. adj. [from toy.] Trifling; wanton.
- TO'YISHNESS. n. f. [from toyish.] Nugacity;
wantonness.
Your society will discredit that toyishness of wanton fancy, that plays tricks with words, and frolics with the caprices of frothy imagination. Glanville.
- TO'YMAN. n. f. [from toy.] A feller of toys.
But what in oddness can be more sublime,
Than S—, the foremost toyman of his time? Young.
- TO'YSHOP. n. f. [toy and shop.] A shop where playthings and little nice manufactures are sold.
Fans, silks, ribbands, laces, and gewgaws, lay so thick together, that the heart was nothing else but a toyshop. Addison.
With varying vanities from every part,
They shift the moving toyshop of their heart. Pope.
- TO TOZE. v. a. [See TOUSE and TEASE.]
To pull by violence or importunity.
Think't thou, for that I insinuate, or toze from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier? Shaksp.
- TRACE. n. f. [trace, Fr. traccia, Italian.]
1. Mark left by any thing passing; footsteps.
These as a line their long dimension drew,
Streaking the ground with sinuous trace. Milton.
2. Remain; appearance of what has been.
The people of these countries are reported to have lived like the beasts among them, without any traces of orders, laws, or religion. Temple.
There are not the least traces of it to be met, the greatest part of the ornaments being taken from Trajan's arch, and set up to the conqueror. Addison.
The shady empire shall retain no trace
Of war, or blood, but in the sylvan chace. Pope.
3. [from tirasser, Fr. tirasses, traces.]
Harness for beasts of draught.
Her waggon spokes made of long spinners' legs;
The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;
The traces, of the smallest spider's web. Shaksp.
The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came. Milton.
While lab'ring oxen, spent with toil and heat,
In their loose traces from the field retreat. Pope.
Twelve young mules,
New to the plough, unpractis'd in the trace. Pope.
- TO TRACE. v. a. [tracer, Fr. tracciare, Italian.]
1. To follow by the footsteps, or remaining marks.
I feel thy power to trace the ways
Of highest agents. Milton.
You may trace the deluge quite round the globe in profane history; and every one of these people have a tale to tell concerning the restauration. Burnet.
They do but trace over the paths beaten by the ancients, or comment, critick, or flourish upon them. Temple.

TRA

- To this haste of the mind, a not due tracing of the arguments to their true foundation is owing. Locke.
2. To follow with exactness.
That servile path thou nobly dost decline,
Of tracing word by word, and line by line. Denham.
 3. To mark out.
He allows the soul power to trace images on the brain, and perceive them. Locke.
His pen can trace out a true quotation. Swift.
 4. To walk over.
Men, as they trace,
Both feet and face one way are wont to lead. Spenser.
We do trace this alley up and down. Shaksp.
 - TRA' CER. n. f. [from trace.] One that traces.
Ambassadors should not be held the tracers of a plot of such malice. Howel.
 - TRACK. n. f. [trac, old Fr. traccia, Ital.]
 1. Mark left upon the way by the foot, or otherwise.
Following the track of Satan. Milton.
Hung by the neck and hair, and dragg'd around,
The hostile spear yet sticking in his wound,
With tracks of blood inscrib'd the dusty ground. Dryden.
Consider the exterior frame of the globe, if we may find any tracks or footsteps of wisdom in its constitution. Bentley.
 2. A road; a beaten path.
With track oblique sidelong he works his way. Milton.
Behold Torquatus the same track pursue,
And next, the two devoted Decii view. Dryden.
 - TO TRACK. v. a. [from the noun.] To follow by the footsteps or marks left in the way.
As shepherd's cur that in dark evening's shade
Hath tracked forth some savage beast's tread. Spenser.
He was not only a professed imitator of Horace,
but a learned plagiarist in all the others; you track him every where in their snow. Dryden.
 - TRA' CKLESS. adj. [from track.] Untrod-den; marked with no footsteps.
Loft in trackless fields of shining day,
Unable to discern the way,
Which Nassau's virtue only could explore. Pope.
 - TRACT. n. f. [tractus, Latin.]
 1. Any kind of extended substance.
Heav'n hides nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of hell. Milton.
 2. A region; a quantity of land.
Only there are some tracts which, by high mountains, are barred from air and fresh wind. Raleigh.
Monte Circeo, by Homer called Insula Æcea, is a very high mountain joined to the main land by a narrow tract of earth. Addison.
 3. Continuity; any thing protracted, or drawn out to length.
The myrtle flourisheth still; and wonderful it is, that for so long a tract of time she should still con-
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
Improv'd by tract of time, and wing'd ascend Ethereal as we. Milton.
As in tract of speech a dubious word is easily known by the coherence with the rest, and a dubious letter by the whole word; so many a deaf person, having competent knowledge of language, by an acute sagacity, by some more evident word discerned
by his eye, know the sense. Holder.
 4. Course; manner of process: unless it means, in this place, rather, discourse; explanation.
The tract of every thing
Would, by a good discourser, lose some life
Which action's self was tongue to. Shaksp.
 5. It seems to be used by Shaksp. for track.
The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright tract of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow. Shaksp.

TRA

6. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a small book.
The church clergy at that time writ the best collection of tracts against popery that ever appeared. Swift.
- TRA' CTABLE. adj. [tractabilis, Lat. trait-able, French.]
1. Manageable; docile; compliant; obsequious; practicable; governable.
For moderation of those affections growing from the very natural bitterness and gall of adversity, the scripture much allegeth contrary fruit, which afflic-tion likewise hath, whensoever it falleth on them that are tractable, the grace of God's holy spirit concurring therewith. Hooker.
Tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shaksp.
If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shaksp.
As those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempers to urge them on in an evil course; so those who yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the spirit of God more ready to encourage them. Tillotson.
If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable, and quietly submit. Locke.
2. Palpable; such as may be handled.
The other measures are of continued quantity visible, and for the most part tractable; whereas time is always transient, neither to be seen nor felt.
Holder.
- TRA' CTABLENESS. n. f. [from tractable.]
The state of being tractable; compliance; obsequiousness.
It will be objected, that whatsoever I fancy of children's tractableness, yet many will never apply.
Locke.
- TRA' CTABLY. adv. In a tractable manner; gently.
- TRA' CTATE. n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a tract; a small book.
Many divines of our own nation, in sermons and written tractates of the sabbath, and in their expositions of the fourth commandment, maintain the fore said position. White.
Though philosophical tractates make enumeration of authors, yet are their reasons usually introduced. Brown.
We need no other evidence than Glanville's tractate. Hale.
- TRA' CTILE. adj. [tractus, Lat.] Capable to be drawn out or extended in length;
ductile.
The consistences of bodies are very divers; fragile, tough; flexible, inflexible; tractile, or to be drawn forth in length, intractile. Bacon.
- TRACTI' LITY. n. f. [from tractile.] The quality of being tractile.
Silver, whose ductility and tractility are much inferiour to those of gold, was drawn out to so slender a wire, that a single grain amounted to twenty-seven feet. Derham.
- TRA' CTION. n. f. [from tractus, Latin.]
The act of drawing; the state of being drawn.
The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inwards to bring the terms of that line nearer in proportion as it is curved, and so gives a tension to the tympanum. Holder.
- TRADE. n. f. [tratta, Italian.]
1. Traffick; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods, or for money.
Whoever commands the sea, commands the trade; whoever commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself. Raleigh.
Trade increases in one place, and decays in another. Temple.
2. Occupation; particular employment, whether manual or mercantile, distinguished from the liberal arts or learned professions.

TRA

Appoint to every one that is not able to live of his freehold, a certain trade of life; the which trade he shall be bound to follow. Spenser.

How dizzy! half way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire, dreadful trade!
Shakespeare.

I'll mountebank their loves, and come home be-lov'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare.

Fear and piety,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakespeare.

The rude Equicolæ,
Hunting their sport, and plund'ring wastheir trade.
Dryden.

Fight under him; there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade. Dryden.

The whole division that to Mars pertains,
All trades of death, that deal in steel for gains.
Dryden.

The emperor Pertinax applied himself in his youth to a gainful trade; his father, judging him fit for a better employment, had a mind to turn his education another way; the son was obstinate in pursuing so profitable a trade, a sort of merchandize of wood. Arbutnot.

3. Instruments of any occupation.
The shepherd bears

His house and household goods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dryden.

4. Any employment not manual; habitual exercise.

Call some of young years to train them up in that trade; and so fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.

5. Custom; habit; standing practice.

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade. Shakespeare.

6. Formerly trade was used of domestick, and traffick of foreign commerce.

7. TRADE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To traffick; to deal; to hold commerce.

He commanded these servants to be called, to know how much every man had gained by trading.
Luke.

Delos, a sacred place, grew a free port, where nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded.
Arbutnot.

Maximinus traded with the Goths in the product of his estate in Thracia. Arbutnot.

2. To act merely for money.

Saucy and overbold! how did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare.

3. To have a trade wind.

They on the trading flood ply tow'rd the pole.
Milton.

To TRADE. v. a. To sell or exchange in commerce.

They were thy merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market.
Ezekiel.

TRADE-WIND. n. f. [trade and wind.]

The monsoon; the periodical winds between the tropicks.

Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more;

A constant trade-wind will securely blow,
And gently lay us on the spicy shore. Dryden.

His were the projects of perpetuum mobiles, and of increasing the trade-wind by vast plantations of reeds. Arbutnot.

Comfortable is the trade-wind to the equatorial parts, without which life would be both short and grievous. Cheyne.

TRADED. adj. [from trade.] Versed; practised.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such rheum:
And he long traded in it makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare.

TRADEFUL. adj. [trade and full.] Commercial; busy in traffick.

TRA

Ye tradeful merchants, that with weary toil
Do seek most precious things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure spoil,
What needeth you to seek so far in vain? Shaksp.

Eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. Shakespeare.

TRADER. n. f. [from trade.]

1. One engaged in merchandize or commerce.

Pilgrims are going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses.
Shakespeare.

Now the victory's won,
We return to our lasses like fortunate traders, Triumphant with spoils. Dryden.

Many traders will necessitate merchants to trade for less profit, and consequently be more frugal.
Child.

That day traders sum up the accounts of the week.
Swift.

2. One long used in the methods of money-getting; a practitioner.

TRADES FOLK. n. f. [trade and folk.]

People employed in trades.

By his advice victuallers and tradesfolk would soon get all the money of the kingdom into their hands. Swift.

TRADESMAN. n. f. [trade and man.]

A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman; and it seems distinguished in Shakespeare from a man that labours with his hands.

I live by the awl, I meddle with no tradesmen's matters. Shakespeare.

They rather had beheld Dissentious numbers pest'ring streets; than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their functions. Shakespeare.

Order a trade thither and thence so as some few merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them.

Tradesmen might conjecture what doings they were like to have in their respective dealings.
Graunt.

M. Jourdain would not be thought a tradesman, but ordered some silk to be measured out to his partner's friends: now I give up my shop. Prior.

From a plain tradesman with a shop, he is now grown a very rich country gentleman. Arbutnot.

Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesmen. Swift.

Boastful and rough, your first son is a squire;
The next a tradesman, meek, and much a liar. Pope.

Penitens was a busy notable tradesman, very prosperous in his dealings, but died in the thirty-fifth year of his age. Law.

TRADITION. n. f. [tradition, French; traditio, Latin.]

1. The act or practice of delivering accounts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.

To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received. Hooker.

2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.

They the truth
With superstitions and traditions taint, Left only in those written records pure. Milton.

It is well known to have been a general tradition amongst these nations, that the world was made, and had a beginning. Wilkins.

Our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope.

TRADITIONAL. adj. [from tradition.]

1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.

TRA

Whence may we have the infallible traditional sense of scripture, if not from the heads of their church? Tillotson.

If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the same traditional sloth and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits. Swift.

2. Observant of traditions, or idle rites.
Not used, nor proper.

God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary!

You are too senseless obstinate, my lord;
Too ceremonious and traditional. Shakespeare.

TRADITIONALLY. adv. [from traditional.]

1. By transmission from age to age.

There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from St. John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Burnet.

2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials.

It crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchiale and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day. Brown.

TRADITIONARY. adj. [from tradition.]

Delivered by tradition; transmissive; handed down from age to age.

Suppose the same traditionary strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain, Inveterate truth, an old plain Sabine's heart. Dryden.

Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditionary sense of texts of scripture. Tillotson.

The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages. Addison.

TRADITIVE. adj. [traditive, Fr. from trado, Latin.]

Transmitted or transmissible from age to age.

Suppose we on things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide. Dryden.

To TRADUCE. v. a. [traduco, Latin; traduire, French.]

1. To censure; to condemn; to represent as blamable; to calumniate; to decry.

The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the publick devout prayers of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, to bring them into contempt, and so slack the force of all men's devotion towards them. Hooker.

Those particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly sift, when other things also traduced in the publick duties of the church are, together with these, to be touched. Hooker.

Whilst calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and designing, they will be traducing. Government of the Tongue.

From that preface he took his hint; though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel. Dryden.

2. To propagate; to increase or continue by deriving one from another.

None are so gross as to contend for this,
That souls from bodies may traduced be;
Between whose natures no proportion is,
When root and branch in nature still agree. Deviet.

From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth. Hale.

Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whether it be immediately created or traduced, hath been the great ball of contention to the latter ages. Glanville.

TRADUCEMENT. n. f. [from traduce.]

Censure; obloquy.
Rome must know
The value of her own: 'twere a concealment

TRA

Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings. Shakspeare.

TRADU'CER. n. f. [from traduce.]

1. A false censurer; a calumniator.
2. One who derives.

TRADU'CIBLE. adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived.

Though oral tradition might be a competent discoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet such a tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages. Hale.

TRADU'CTION. n. f. [from traduce.]

1. Derivation from one of the same kind; propagation.

The patrons of traduction accuse their adversaries of affronting the attributes of God; and the asserters of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of things. Glanville.

If by traduction came thy mind,

Our wonder is the less to find

A soul so charming from a stock so good;

Thy father was transfus'd into thy blood. Dryden.

2. Tradition; transmission from one to another.

Touching traditional communication and traduction of truths connatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that derivation. Hale.

3. Conveyance; act of transferring.

Since America is divided on every side by considerable seas, and no passage known by land, the traduction of brutes could only be by shipping: though this was a method used for the traduction of useful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions should have so much care used for their transportation. Hale.

4. Transition.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon.

TRA'FFICK. n. f. [trafique, Fr. traffico, Italian.]

1. Commerce; merchandising; large trade; exchange of commodities. Traffick was formerly used of foreign commerce in distinction from trade.

Traffick's thy god.

My father

A merchant of great traffick through the world.

Shakspeare.

Tyre, a town indeed of great wealth and traffick, and the most famous emporium of the elder times.

Heylin.

As he was, for his great wisdom, stiled the English Solomon, he followed the example of that wise king in nothing more than by advancing the traffick of his people. Addison.

2. Commodities; subject of traffick.

You'll see a draggled damsel

From Billingsgate her fishy traffick bear.

Gay.

TO TRA'FFICK. v. n. [traffiquer, French; trafficare, Italian.]

1. To practise commerce; to merchandise; to exchange commodities.

They first plant for corn and cattle, and after enlarge themselves for things to traffick withal.

Bacon.

2. To trade meanly or mercenarily.

Saucy and overbold! how did you dare

To trade and traffick with Macbeth

In riddles and affairs of death?

Shakspeare.

How hast thou dar'd to think so vilely of me,

That I would condescend to thy mean arts,

And traffick with thee for a prince's ruin?

Rowe.

TRA'FFICKER. n. f. [traffiqueur, Fr. from traffick.] Trader; merchant.

Your argosies with portly sail,

Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,

Do overpeer the petty traffickers

That curtsy to them.

Shakspeare.

TRA

In it are so many Jews very rich, and so great traffickers, that they have most of the English trade in their hands. Addison.

TRA'GACANTH. n. f. [tragacantha, Lat.]

A gum which proceeds from the incision of the root or trunk of a plant so called.

Trewoux.

TRAGE'DIAN. n. f. [from tragedy; tragædus, Latin.]

1. A writer of tragedy.

Many of the poets themselves had much nobler conceptions of the Deity, than to imagine him to have any thing corporeal; as in these verses out of the ancient tragedian. Stillingfleet.

2. An actor of tragedy.

I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;

Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side,

Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,

Intending deep suspicion.

Shakspeare.

To the well-lung'd tragedian's rage

They recommend their labours of the stage. Dryden.

TRA'GEDY. n. f. [tragedie, French; tragædia, Latin.]

1. A dramattick representation of a serious action.

Thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,

Will now conclude their plotted tragedy. Shakspeare.

All our tragedies are of kings and princes; but you never see a poor man have a part unless it be as a chorus, or to fill up the scenes, to dance, or to be derided. Taylor.

Imitate the sister of painting, tragedy; which employs the whole forces of her art in the main action. Dryden.

An anthem to their god Dionysus, whilst the goat stood at his altar to be sacrificed, was called the goat-song or tragedy. Rymer.

There to her heart sad tragedy address

The dagger, wont to pierce the tyrant's breast.

Pope.

2. Any mournful or dreadful event.

I shall laugh at this,

That they, who brought me in my master's hate,

I live to look upon their tragedy. Shakspeare.

I look upon this now done in England as another act of the same tragedy which was lately begun in Scotland. King Charles.

TRA'GICAL. adj. [tragicus, Latin; tragique, French.]

1. Relating to tragedy.

The root and tragical effect,

Vouchsafe, O thou the mournfull'ft muse of nine,

That won't'it the tragick stage for to direct,

In funeral complaints and wailful time

Reveal to me.

Spenser.

Thy Clarence he is dead that stabb'd my Edward;

And the beholders of this tragick play,

Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves. Shakspeare.

2. Mournful; calamitous; sorrowful; dreadful.

A dire induction I am witness to;

And will to France, hoping the consequence

Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical. Shakspeare.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day

Is crept into the bosom of the sea:

And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night. Shakspeare.

Why look you still so stern and tragical? Shakspeare.

So tragical and merited a fate

Shall swallow those who God and justice hate.

Sandys.

I now must change those notes to tragick. Milt.

The tale of this song is a pretty tragical story;

and pleases, because it is a copy of nature. Addison.

Bid them dress their bloody altars

With every circumstance of tragick pomp. Rowe.

TRA'GICALLY. adv. [from tragical.]

1. In a tragical manner; in a manner befitting tragedy.

Juvenal's genius was sharp and eager; and as his provocations were great, he has revenged them tragically. Dryden.

2. Mournfully; sorrowfully; calamitously.

TRA'GICALNESS. n. f. [from tragical.]

Mournfulness; calamitousness.

TRA

Like bold Phaëtons, we despise all benefits of the father of light, unless we may guide his chariot; and we moralize the fable as well in the tragicalness of the event, as in the insolence of the undertaking. Decay of Piety.

TRAGICO'MEDY. n. f. [tragicomedie, Fr. from tragedy and comedy.] A drama compounded of merry and serious events.

On the world's stage, when our applause grows high,

For acting here life's tragi-comedy,

The lookers-on will say we act not well,

Unless the last the former scenes excel. Denham.

The faults of that drama are in the kind of it, which is tragi-comedy; but it was given to the people. Dryden.

We have often had tragi-comedies upon the English theatre with success: but in that sort of composition the tragedy and comedy are in distinct scenes. Gay.

TRAGICO'MICAL. adj. [tragicomique, Fr. tragicomical and comical.]

1. Relating to tragicomedy.

The whole art of the tragi-comical farce lies in interweaving the several kinds of the drama, so that they cannot be distinguished. Gay.

2. Consisting of a mixture of mirth with sorrow.

TRAGICO'MICALLY. adv. [from tragicomical.] In a tragicomical manner.

Laws my Pindarick parents matter'd not,

So I was tragicomically got.

Brampston.

TO TRAJE'CT. v. a. [trajectus, Latin.]

To cast through; to throw.

The disputes of those assuming confidents, that think so highly of their attainments, are like the controversy of those in Plato's den, who having never seen but the shadow of an horse trajected, eagerly contended, whether its neighing proceeded from its appearing mane or tail. Glanville.

If there are different kinds of æther, they have a different degree of rarity; by which it becomes so fit a medium for trajecting the light of all celestial bodies. Grew.

If the sun's light be trajected through three or more cross prisms successively, those rays which in the first prism are refracted more than others, are in all the following prisms refracted more than others in the same proportion. Newton.

TRAJE'CT. n. f. [trajet, French; trajectus, Latin.] A ferry; a passage for a water-carriage.

What notes and garments he doth give thee,

Bring to the trajet, to the common ferry,

With trades to Venice.

Shakspeare.

TRAJE'CTION. n. f. [trajectio, Latin.]

1. The act of darting through.

Later astronomers have observed the free motion of such comets as have, by a trajection through the æther, wandered through the celestial or interstellar part of the universe. Boyle.

2. Emission.

The trajections of such an object more sharply pierce the martyred soul of John, than afterwards did the nails the crucified body of Peter. Brown.

TO TRAIL. v. a. [trailler, French.]

1. To hunt by the track.

Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully;

Trail your steel pikes.

Shakspeare.

Faintly he stagger'd through the hissing throng,

And hung his head, and trail'd his legs along.

Dryden.

3. To draw a long floating or waving body.

What boots the regal circle on his head,

That long behind he trails his pompous robe,

And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe? Pope.

4. [treglen, Dutch.] To draw; to drag.

Because they shall not trail me through their streets

Like a wild beast, I am content to go.

Milton.

Thrice happy poet, who may trail

Thy house about thee like a snail;

Or, harness'd to a nag, at ease

Take journies in it like a chaise;

Or in a boat, when'er thou wilt,
Canst make it serve thee for a tilt. Swift.

To TRAIL. v. n. To be drawn out in length.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steepe,
For very feltness loud he 'gan to weep. Spenser.

Swift men of foot, whose broad-set backs their trailing hair did hide. Chapman.

Since the flames pursu'd the trailing smoke,
He knew his boon was granted. Dryden.

From o'er the roof the blaze began to move,
And trailing vanish'd in th' Idean grove;
It swept a path in heav'n, and shone a guide,
Then in a steaming stench of sulphur dy'd. Dryd.

TRAIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Scent left on the ground by the animal pursued; track followed by the hunter.

See but the issue of my jealousy: if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again. Shakspeare.

How cheerfully on the false trail they cry!
Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs. Shakspeare.

I do think, or else this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail of policy so sure
As I have us'd to do, that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy. Shakspeare.

2. Any thing drawn to length.

From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryd.

When lightning shoots in glitt'ring trails along,
It shines, 'tis true, and gilds the gloomy night;
But when it strikes, 'tis fatal. Roscoe.

3. Any thing drawn behind in long undulations.

And round about her work she did empale
With a fair border wrought of sundry flow'rs,
Enwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser.

A sudden star it shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair. Pope.

To TRAIN. v. a. [trainer, French.]

1. To draw along.

In hollow cube he train'd
His devilish enginery. Milton.

2. To draw; to entice; to invite; to allure.

If but twelve French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side. Shakspeare.

3. To draw by artifice or stratagem.

For that cause I train'd thee to my house. Shakspeare.

Oh, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note!
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears.
Sing, Syren, to thyself, and I will doat;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shakspeare.

4. To draw from act to act by persuasion or promise.

We did train him on,
And his corruption being ta'en from us,
We as the spring of all shall pay for all. Shakspeare.

5. To educate; to bring up: commonly with up.

I can speak English,
For I was train'd up in the English court. Shakspeare.

A most rare speaker,
To nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers. Shakspeare.

A place for exercise and training up of youth in the fashion of the heathen. 2 Maccabees.

Call some of young years to train them up in that trade, and so fit them for weighty affairs, Bacon.

Spirits train'd up in feast and song. Milton.

The first christians were by great hardships trained up for glory. Tillotson.

The young soldier is to be trained on to the warfare of life; wherein care is to be taken that more things be not represented as dangerous than really are so. Locke.

6. To exercise, or form to any practice by exercise.

Abram armed his trained servants born in his house, and pursued. Genesis.

The warrior horse here bred he's taught to train. Dryden.

TRAIN. n. f. [train, French.]

1. Artifice; stratagem of enticement.

He cast by treaty and by trains
Her to persuade. Spenser.

Their general did with due care provide,
To save his men from ambush and from train. Fairfax.

This mov'd the king,
To lay to draw him in by any train. Daniel.

Sworn with pride, into the snare I fell
Of fair fallacious looks, venereal trains,
Softened with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

Now to my charms
And to my wily trains! I shall ere long
Be well stock'd with as fair a herd as graz'd
About my mother Circe. Milton.

The practice begins of crafty men upon the simple and good; these easily follow and are caught, while the others lay trains and pursue a game. Temple.

2. The tail of a bird.

Cottly followers are not to be liked, left while a man makes his train longer he makes his wings shorter. Bacon.

Contracting their body, and being forced to draw in their fore parts to establish the hinder in the elevation of the train, if the fore parts do part and incline to the ground, the hinder grow too weak, and suffer the train to fall. Brown.

The bird guideth her body with her train, and the ship is steered with the rudder. Hakewill.

Th' other, whose gay train
Adorns him colour'd with the florid hue
Of rainbows and starry eyes. Milton.

The train steers their flights, and turns their bodies like the rudder of a ship; as the kite, by a light turning of his train, moves his body which way he pleases. Ray.

3. The part of a gown that falls behind upon the ground.

A thousand pounds a year, for pure respect!
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his fore skirts. Shakspeare.

4. A series; a consecution: either local or mental.

Rivers now stream, and draw their humid train. Milton.

Distinct gradual growth in knowledge carries its own light with it, in every step of its progression, in an easy and orderly train. Locke.

If we reflect on what is observable in ourselves, we shall find our ideas always passing in train, one going and another coming, without intermission. Locke.

They laboured in vain so far to reach the apostle's meaning, all along in the train of what he said. Locke.

Some truths result from any ideas, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions; other truths require a train of ideas placed in order, a due comparing of them, and deductions made with attention. Locke.

What wouldst thou have me do? consider well
The train of ills our love would draw behind it. Addison.

The author of your beings can by a glance of the eye, or a word speaking, enlighten your mind, and conduct you to a train of happy sentiments. Watts.

5. Process; method; state of procedure.

If things were once in this train, if virtue were established as necessary to reputation, and vice not only loaded with infamy, but made the infallible ruin of all men's pretensions, our duty would take root in our nature. Swift.

6. A retinue; a number of followers or attendants.

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That in the most exact regard support
The worship of their names. Shakspeare.

Our fire walks forth, without more train
Accompany'd than with his own complete Perfections. Milton.

Thou shouldst be seen
A goddess among gods, ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton.

He comes not with a train to move our fear. Dryden.

The king's daughter, with a lovely train
Of fellow nymphs, was sporting on the plain. Addison.

He would put a check to the fury of war, that a stop might be put to those things which are of its train. Smallridge.

7. An orderly company; a procession.

Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
If better thou belong not to the dawn. Milton.

Who the knights in green, and what the train
Of ladies dress'd with daisies on the plain? Dryden.

8. The line of powder leading to the mine.

Since first they fail'd in their designs,
To take in heav'n by springing mines;
And with unanswerable barrels
Of gunpowder, dispute their quarrels;
Now take a course more practicable,
By laying trains to fire the rabble. Hudibras.

Shall he that gives fire to the train, pretend to wash his hands of the hurt that's done by the playing of the mine? L'Estrange.

9. TRAIN of artillery. Cannons accompanying an army.

With an army abundantly supplied with a train of artillery, and all other provisions necessary, the king advanced towards Scotland. Clarendon.

TRAINBANDS. n. f. [train and band:

I suppose for trained band.] The militia; the part of a community trained to martial exercise.

He directed the trainbands, which consisted of the most substantial householders, to attend. Clarendon.

Give commission
To some bold man, whose loyalty you trust,
And let him raise the trainbands of the city. Dryd.

A council of war was called, wherein we agreed to retreat: but before we could give the word, the trainbands, taking advantage of our delay, fled first. Addison.

TRAINBEARER. n. f. [train and bearer.]

One that holds up a train.

TRAINOIL. n. f. [train and oil.] Oil drawn by coction from the fat of the whale.

TRA'INY. adj. [from train.] Belonging to train oil. A bad word.

Here steams ascend,
Where the huge hogheads sweat with trainy oil. Gay.

To TRAIPISE. v. a. [A low word. See

TRAPE.] To walk in a careless or fluttish manner.

Two slipshod mules traipse along,
In lofty madness, meditating song. Pope.

TRAIT. n. f. [trait, French.] A stroke;

a touch. Scarce English.

By this single trait Homer makes an essential difference between the Iliad and Odyssey; that in the former the people perished by the folly of their kings; in this, by their own folly. Brown.

TRAITOR. n. f. [traître, French; traditor, Latin.] One who being trusted betrays.

The law laid that grievous punishment upon traitors, to forfeit all their lands to the prince, that men might be terrified from committing treason. Spenser.

If you flatter him, you are a great traitor to him. Bacon.

I'll put him thus far into the plot, that he should be secured as a traitor; but when I am out of reach,
he shall be released. Dryden.

There is no difference, in point of morality, whether a man calls me traitor in one word, or says I am one hired to betray my religion, and sell my country. Swift.

TRAITORLY. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious.

These traitorly rascals' miseries are to be smil'd
at, their offences being so capital. Shakspeare.

TRAITOROUS. adj. [from traitor.]

Treacherous; perfidious; faithless.

What news with him, that trait'rous wight? Daniel.

Pontinius knows not you,
While you stand out upon these traitorous terms.

Ben Jonson.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, he would have severely punished, and the neutrals noted.

Bacon.

More of his majesty's friends have lost their lives in this rebellion than of his traitorous subjects.

Addison.

TRAITOROUSLY. adv. [from traitorous.] In a manner suiting traitors; perfidiously; treacherously.

Good duke Humphry traitorously is murder'd
By Suffolk.

Shakspeare.

Thou bitter sweet! whom I had laid
Next me, me traitorously hast betray'd;
And unsuspected half invisibly

At once fled into him, and stay'd with me.

Donne.

They had traitorously endeavoured to subvert the fundamental laws, deprive the king of his regal power, and to place on his subjects a tyrannical power.

Clarendon.

TRAITRESS. n. f. [from traitor.] A woman who betrays.

I, what I am, by what I was, o'ercome;
Traitors, restore my beauty and my charms,
Nor steal my conquest with my proper arms.

Dryd.

By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life.

Pope.

TRALATI'TIOUS. adj. [from translatius, Latin.] Metaphorical; not literal.

TRALATI'TIOUSLY. adv. [from tralati'tious.] Metaphorically; not literally; not according to the first intention of the word.

Language properly is that of the tongue directed to the ear by speaking; written language is tralati'tiously so called, because it is made to represent to the eye the same words which are pronounced.

Holder.

To TRALI'NEATE. v. n. [trans and line.]

To deviate from any direction.

If you tralineate from your father's mind,
What are you else but of a bastard kind?
Do then as your progenitors have done,
And by their virtues prove yourself their son.

Dryd.

TRAMMEL. n. f. [travail, French; trama, tragula, Latin.]

1. A net in which birds or fish are caught.
The trammel differeth not much from the shape of the bunt, and serveth to such use as the wear and haking.

Carew.

2. Any kind of net.

Her golden locks she roundly did uptry
In braided trammels, that no looser hairs
Did out of order stray about her dainty ears.

Spenser.

3. A kind of shackles in which horses are taught to pace.

I may go shuffling at first, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge at constancy, till I have worn off the hitching in my pace.

Dryden.

To TRAMMEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

To catch; to intercept.

If th' assassination

Could trammel up the consequence, and catch
With its furcace success.

Shakspeare.

To TRAMPLE. v. a. [trampe, Danish.]

To tread under foot with pride, contempt, or elevation.

Cast not your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet.

Mattibew.

My strength shall trample thee as mire.

Milton.

To TRAMPLE. v. n.

1. To tread in contempt.

Diogenes trampled on Plato's pride with greater of his own.

Government of the Tongue.

Your country's gods I scorn,
And trample on their ignominious altars.

Rome.

2. To tread quick and loudly.

I hear his thund'ring voice resound,
And trampling feet that shake the solid ground.

Dryden.

TRAMPLER. n. f. [from trample.] One that tramples.

TRANA'TION. n. f. [trano, Latin.] The act of swimming over.

TRANCE. n. f. [transe, French; transitus, Latin.] It might therefore be written transe.] An ecstasy; a state in which the soul is rapt into visions of future or distant things; a temporary absence of the soul from the body.

Gynecia had been in such a trance of musing, that Zelmane was fighting with the lion before she knew of any lion's coming.

Sidney.

Rapt with joy resembling heavenly madness,
My soul was ravish'd quite as in a trance.

Spenser.

That Taliessen, once which made the rivers dance,
And in his rapture rais'd the mountain's from their trance.

Drayton.

Abstract as in a trance, methought I saw.

Milt.

Sudden he starts,
Shook from his tender trance.

Thomson.

TRANCED. adj. [from trance.] Lying in a trance or ecstasy.

His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack. Twice then the trumpets sounded,
And there I left him tranc'd.

Shakspeare.

TRANGRAM. n. f. [A cant word.] An odd intricately contrived thing.

What's the meaning of all these transgrams and gimcracks? what are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds?

Arbutnot.

TRANNEL. n. f. A sharp pin. Perhaps from trennel.

With a small trannel of iron, or a large nail grounded to a sharp point, they mark the brick.

Moxon.

TRANQUIL. adj. [tranquille, French; tranquillus, Latin.] Quiet; peaceful; undisturbed.

I had been happy,
So I had nothing known. Oh now, for ever Farewel the tranquil mind! farewell content!

Shakspeare.

TRANQUILLITY. n. f. [tranquillitas, Latin; tranquillité, French.] Quiet; peace of mind; peace of condition; freedom from perturbation.

Leave off,

To let a weary wretch from her due rest,
And trouble dying souls tranquillity.

Spenser.

How rev'rend is the face of this tall pile,
Whose aged pillars rear their marble heads
To bear aloft its arch'd and pond'rous roof,
By its own weight made steadfast and immoveable,
Looking tranquillity!

Congreve.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so much tranquillity, so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour.

Pope.

To TRANSA'CT. v. a. [transactus, Latin.]

1. To manage; to negotiate; to conduct a treaty or affairs.

2. To perform; to do; to carry on.

It cannot be expected they should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some few of the disciples only, as the transfiguration and the agony.

Addison.

TRANSA'CTION. n. f. [transactio, Fr. from transact.] Negotiation; dealing between man and man; management; affairs; things managed.

It is not the purpose of this discourse to set down the particular transactions of this treaty.

Clarendon.

TRANSANIMA'TION. n. f. [trans and anima.] Conveyance of the soul from one body to another.

If the transanimation of Pythagoras were true, that the souls of men transmigrate into species answering their former natures, some men cannot escape that very brood whose fire Satan entered.

Brown

To TRANSCEND. v. a. [transcends, Lat.]

1. To pass; to overpass.

It is a dangerous opinion to such popes as shall transcend their limits, and become tyrannical.

Bacon.

To judge herself, she must herself transcend,
As greater circles comprehend the less.

Davies.

2. To surpass; to outgo; to exceed; to excel.

This glorious piece transcends what he could think;

So much his blood is nobler than his ink.

Waller.

These are they Deserve their greatness and unenvy'd stand,

Since what they act transcends what they command.

Denham.

High though her wit, yet humble was her mind,
As if she could not, or she would not find

How much her worth transcended all her kind.

Dryden.

3. To surmount; to rise above.

Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celesttial-bodies.

Howel.

To TRANSCEND. v. n.

1. To climb. Not in use.

To conclude, because things do not easily sink, they do not drown at all, the fallacy is a frequent addition in human expressions, which often give distinct accounts of proximity, and transcend from one unto another.

Brown.

2. To surpass thought.

The consistence of grace and free will, in this sense, is no such transcending mystery, and I think there is no text in scripture that sounds any thing towards making it so.

Hammond.

TRANSCENDENCE. } n. f. [from trans-
TRANSCENDENCY. } scend.]

1. Excellence; unusual excellence; super-eminence.

2. Exaggeration; elevation beyond truth.

It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God: this would have done better in poetry, where transcendencies are more allowed.

Bacon.

TRANSCENDENT. adj. [transcendens, Latin; transcendant, French.] Excellent; supremely excellent; passing others.

The title of queen is given by Ignatius to the Lord's-day, not by way of derogation and diminution, but to signify the eminent and transcendent honour of the day.

White.

Thou, whose strong hand, with so transcendent worth,

Holds high the rein of fair Parthenope.

Crashaw.

There is, in a lawgiver, a habitual and ultimate intention of a more excellent and transcendent
nature.

Bishop Sanderson.

If thou beest he—But O! how fall'n, how chang'd
From him who in the happy realms of light, Cloath'd with transcendent brightness, didst outshine
Myriads, though bright!

Milton.

Oh charming princess! oh transcendent maid!

A. Phillips.

The right our Creator has to our obedience is of so high and transcendent a nature, that it can suffer no competition; his commands must have the first and governing influence on all our actions.

Rogers.

TRANSCENDENTAL. adj. [transcendentalis, low Latin.]

1. General; pervading many particulars.

2. Supereminent; passing others.

Though the Deity perceiveth not pleasure nor pain, as we do; yet he must have a perfect and transcendental perception of these, and of all other things.

Grew.

TO TRANSCRIBE. v. a. [transcribo, Lat. transcrire, French.] To copy; to write from an exemplar.

He was the original of all those inventions, from which others did but transcribe copies. Clarendon.

The most rigid exactors of mere outward purity do but transcribe the folly of him who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak.

Decay of Piety.

If we imitate their repentance as we transcribe their faults, we shall be received with the same mercy. Rogers.

TRANSCRIBER. n. s. [from transcribe.] A copier; one who writes from a copy.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers. Addison.

Writings have been corrupted by little and little, by unskilful transcribers. Waterland.

TRANSCRIPT. n. s. [transcript, French; transcriptum, Latin.] A copy; any thing written from an original.

The Grecian learning was but a transcript of the Chaldean and Egyptian; and the Roman of the Grecian. Glanville.

The decalogue of Moses was but a transcript, not an original. South.

Dictate, O mighty Judge! what thou hast seen Of cities and of courts, of books and men, And deign to let thy servant hold the pen. Through ages thus I may presume to live, And from the transcript of thy prose receive What my own short-liv'd verse can never give. Prior.

TRANSCRIPTION. n. s. [transcription, French; from transcriptus, Latin.] The act of copying.

The ancients were but men; the practice of transcription in our days was no monster in their's: plagiary had not its nativity with printing, but began in times when thefts were difficult. Brown.

The corruptions that have crept into it by many transcriptions was the cause of so great difference. Brewerwood.

TRANSCRIPTIVELY. adv. [from transcript.] In manner of a copy.

Not a few transcriptively subscribing their names to other men's endeavours, transcribe all they have written. Brown.

TO TRANSCUR. v. n. [transcurro, Latin.] To run or rove to and fro.

By fixing the mind on one object, it doth not spate and transcur. Bacon.

TRANSCURSION. n. s. [from transcurfus, Latin.] Ramble; passage through; passage beyond certain limits; extraordinary deviation.

In a great whale, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcurfion throughout the whole. Bacon.

I have briefly run over transcurfions, as if my pen had been posting with them. Wotton.

His philosophy gives them transcurfions beyond the vortex we breathe in, and leads them through others which are only known in an hypothesis. Glanville.

I am to make often transcurfions into the neighbouring forests as I pass along. Howel.

If man were out of the world, who were then left to view the face of heaven, to wonder at the transcurfion of comets? More.

TRANSE. n. s. [transe, French. See TRANCE.] A temporary absence of the soul; an ecstasy.

Abstract as in a transe, methought I saw, Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape Still glorious before whom awake I stood. Milton.

TRANSELEMENTATION. n. s. [trans and element.] Change of one element into another.

Rain we allow; but if they suppose any other transelementation, it neither agrees with Moses's philosophy nor St. Peter's. Burnet.

TRANSEXION. n. s. [trans and sexus, Lat.] Change from one sex to another.

It much impeacheth the iterated transexion of hares, if that be true which some physicians affirm, that transmutation of sexes was only so in opinion, and that those transseminated persons were really men at first. Brown.

TO TRANSFER. v. a. [transferer, French; transfero, Latin.]

1. To convey; to make over from one to another: with to, sometimes with upon.

He that transfers the laws of the Lacedemonians to the people of Athens, should find a great absurdity and inconvenience. Spenser.

Was't not enough you took my crown away, But cruelly you must my love betray? I was well pleas'd to have transferr'd my right, And better chang'd your claim of lawless might. Dryden.

The king,

Who from himself all envy would remove, Left both to be determin'd by the laws, And to the Grecian chiefs transferr'd the cause. Dryden.

This was one perverse effect of their sitting at ease under their vines and fig-trees, that they forgot from whence that ease came, and transferred all the honour of it upon themselves. Atterbury.

Your sacred aid religious monarchs own, When first they merit, then ascend the throne: But tyrants dread you, lest your just decree Transfer the power, and set the people free. Prior.

By reading we learn not only the actions and the sentiments of different nations, but transfer to ourselves the knowledge and improvements of the most learned men. Watts.

2. To remove; to transport.

The king was much moved with this unexpected accident, because it was stirred in such a place where he could not with safety transfer his own person to suppress it. Bacon.

He thirty rolling years the crown shall wear, Then from Lavinium shall the seat transfer. Dryden.

TRANSFER. n. s. A change of property; a delivery of property to another.

TRANSFERER. n. s. He that transfers.

TRANSFIGURATION. n. s. [transfiguration, French.]

1. Change of form.

In kinds where the discrimination of sexes is obscure, these transformations are more common, and in some without commixture; as in caterpillars or silkworms, wherein there is a visible and triple transfiguration. Brown.

2. The miraculous change of our blessed Saviour's appearance on the mount.

It cannot be expected that other authors should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some of the disciples; such as the transfiguration and the agony in the garden. Addison.

Did Raphael's pencil never chuse to fall? Say, are his works transfigurations all? Blackmore.

TO TRANSFIGURE. v. a. [transfigurer, French; trans and figura, Latin.] To transform; to change with respect to outward appearance.

I am the more zealous to transfigure your love into devotion, because I have observed your passion to have been extremely impatient of confinement. Boyle.

The nuptial right his outrage strait attends, The dow'r desir'd is his transfigur'd friends: The incantation backward she repeats, Inverts her rod, and what she did defeats. Garth.

TO TRANSFIX. v. a. [transfixus, Latin.]

To pierce through.

Amongst these mighty men were women mix'd; The bold Semiramis, whose sides transfix'd With son's own blade, her soul reproaches spoke. Spenser.

With linked thunderbolts Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milton.

Diana's dart

In an unhappy chace transfix'd her heart: Dryden.
Nor good Eurytion envy'd him the prize,
Though he transfix'd the pigeon in the skies. Dryden.
Till fate shall with a single dart
Transfix the pair it cannot part. Fenton.

TO TRANSFORM. v. a. [transformer, Fr. trans and forma, Latin.] To metamorphose; to change with regard to external form.

She demanded of him, whether the goddess of those woods had such a power to transform every body. Sidney.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakspeare.
As is the fable of the lady fair,
Which for her lust was turn'd into a cow;
When thirsty to a stream she did repair,
And saw herself transform'd the wist not how. Davies.

TO TRANSFORM. v. n. To be metamorphosed.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet
In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

TRANSFORMATION. n. s. [from transform.] Change of shape; act of changing the form; state of being changed with regard to form; metamorphosis.

Something you have heard
Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it,
Since not th' exterior, nor the inward man,
Resembles that it was. Shakspeare.

What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast?

And what a beast art thou already, and feelest not thy loss in transformation! Shakspeare.

The mensuration of all manner of curves, and their mutual transformation, are not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions. Watts.

TRANSFRETATION. n. s. [trans and fretum, Latin.] Passage over the sea.

Since the last transfretation of king Richard the second, the crown of England never sent over numbers of men sufficient to defend the small territory. Davies.

TO TRANSFUSE. v. a. [transfusio, Lat.] To pour out of one into another.

Between men and beasts there is no possibility of social communion; because the well-spring of that communion is a natural delight which man hath to transfuse from himself into others, and to receive from others into himself, especially those things wherein the excellency of his kind doth most consist. Hobbes.

Transfus'd on thee his ample spirit rests. Milton.
When did his muse from Fletcher scenes purloin,
As thou whole Eth'ridge dost transfuse to thine?
But so transfus'd, as oil and waters flow,
His always floats above, thine sinks below. Dryden.

Where the juices are in a morbid state, if one could suppose all the unsound juices taken away, and sound juices immediately transfused, the sound juices would grow morbid. Arbutnot.

TRANSFUSION. n. s. [transfusion, Fr. transfusio, Latin.] The act of pouring out of one into another.

The crooked part of the pipe was placed in a box, to prevent the loss of the quicksilver that might fall aside in the transfusion from the vessel into the pipe. Boyle.

Poesy is of so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum. Denham.

Something must be lost in all transfusion, that is, in all translations, but the sense will remain. Dryden.

What noise have we had about transplantation of diseases, and transfusion of blood! Baker.

TO TRANSGRESS. v. a. [transgressor, Fr. transgressus, Latin.]

1. To pass over; to pass beyond.

Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe,
And stupid at the wondrous things he saw,
Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law.
Dryden.

2. To violate; to break.

Let no man doubt but that every thing is well done, because the world is ruled by so good a guide as transgresseth not his own law, than which nothing can be more absolute, perfect, and just. Hooker.

This sorrow we must repeat as often as we transgress
the divine commandments. Wake.

To TRANSGRESS. v. n. To offend by violating a law.

I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all Adam had left him before he transgressed.
Shakspeare.

Achan transgressed in the thing accursed.
1 Chronicles.

He upbraideth us with our offending the law, and objecteth to our infamy the transgressings of our education. Wisdom.

TRANSGRESSION. n. f. [transgression, Fr. from transgress.]

1. Violation of a law; breach of a command.

Shall I abuse this consecrated gift
Of strength, again returning with my hair
After my great transgression: so requite Favour renew'd, and add a greater sin? Milton.

All accusation still is founded upon some law; for where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there can be no transgression, there ought to be no accusation. South.

2. Offence; crime; fault.

What's his fault?

—The flat transgression of a school-boy, who,
being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shews it his companion, and he steals it.

—Wilt thou make a trust a transgression? The transgression is in the stealer. Shakspeare.

Teach us, sweet madam, for our rude transgression,
Some fair excuse. Shakspeare.

TRANSGRESSIVE. adj. [from transgress.]

Faulty; culpable; apt to break laws.

Though permitted unto his proper principles,
Adam perhaps would have sinned without the suggestion of Satan, and from the transgressive infirmities of himself might have erred alone, as well as the angels before him. Brown.

TRANSGRESSOR. n. f. [transgresseur, Fr. from transgress.] Lawbreaker; violator of command; offender.

He intended the discipline of the church should be applied to the greatest and most splendid trans-gressors, as well as to the punishment of meaner offenders. Clarendon.

I go to judge

On earth these thy transgressors; but thou know'st
Whoever judg'd, the worst on me must light
When time shall be. Milton.

Ill worthy I, such title should belong
To me transgressor! who, for thee ordain'd
A help, became thy snare. Milton.

TRANSIENT. adj. [transiens, Latin.]

Soon past; soon passing; short; momentary; not lasting; not durable.

How soon hath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world, the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton.

He that rides post through a country, may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie.
Locke.

Love, hitherto a transient guest,
Ne'er held possession in his breast. Swift.

What is loose love? a transient gust,
A vapour fed from wild desire. Pope.

TRANSIENTLY. adv. [from transient.]

In passage; with a short passage; not with continuance.

I touch here but transiently, without any strict method, on some few of those many rules of imitating nature which Aristotle drew from Homer.
Dryden.

TRANSIENTNESS. n. f. [from transient.] Shortness of continuance; speedy passage.

It were to be wished that all words of this sort,
as they resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, so they might do also in transientness and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

TRANSILIENCY. } n. f. [from transilio, TRANSILIENCY. } Latin.] Leap from thing to thing.

By unadvised transiliency leaping from the effect to its remotest cause, we observe not the connection of more immediate casualties. Glanville.

TRANSIT. n. f. [transitus, Latin.] In astronomy, the passing of any planet just by or under any fixt star; or of the moon covering or moving close by any other planet. Harris.

TRANSITION. n. f. [transitio, Latin.]

1. Removal; passage from one to another.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition without communication of substance, but moisture not.
Bacon.

As for the mutation of sexes, and transition into one another, we cannot deny it in hares, it being observable in man. Brown.

I have given some intimations of the changes which happen in the interior parts of the earth, I mean the transitions and removes of metals and minerals there. Woodward.

2. Change; mode of change.

The spots are of the same colour throughout, there being an immediate transition from white to black, and not declining gradually, and mixing as they approach. Woodward.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.

As once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould;
Thence, by a soft transition we repair
From earthly vehicles to these of air. Pope.

3. [transitio, French.] Passage in writing or conversation from one subject to another.

He with transition sweet new speech resumes.

Milton.

Covetousness was none of his faults, but described as a veil over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness, to which he makes a transition. Dryden.

TRANSITIVE. adj. [transitivus, Latin.]

1. Having the power of passing.

One cause of cold is the contact of cold bodies;
for cold is active and transitive into bodies adjacent,
as well as heat. Bacon.

2. In grammar.

A verb transitive is that which signifies an action, conceived as having an effect upon some object; as ferio terram, I strike the earth. Clarke.

TRANSITORIALLY. adv. [from transitory.]

With speedy evanescence; with short continuance.

TRANSITORINESS. n. f. [from transitory.]

Speedy evanescence.

TRANSITORY. adj. [transitoire, Fr.
transitorius, from transire, Latin.] Continuing but a short time; speedily vanishing.

O Lord, comfort and succour all them who in this transitory life are in trouble. Common Prayer.

If we love things have sought; age is a thing
Which we are fifty years in compassing:
If transitory things, which soon decay,
Age must be loveliest at the latest day. Donne.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson.

To TRANSLATE. v. n. [translatum, Lat.]

1. To transport; to remove.

Since our father is translated unto the gods, our will is, that they that are in our realm live quietly.
2 Maccabees.

By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death. Hebrews.

Those argent fields

Translated saints or middle spirits hold. Milton.

Of the same soil their nursery prepare

With that of their plantation, lest the tree

Translated should not with the soil agree. Dryden.

The gods their shapes to winter birds translate,

But both obnoxious to their former fate. Dryden.

To go to heaven is to be translated to that kingdom you have longed for; to enjoy the glories of eternity. Wake.

2. It is particularly used of the removal of a bishop from one see to another.

Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick to a better, he refused, saying, he would not forsake his poor little old wife, with whom he had so long lived.
Camden.

3. To transfer from one to another; to convey.

I will translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and set up the throne of David. 2 Samuel.

Lucian affirms the souls of usurers, after their death, to be metempsychosed, or translated into the bodies of asses, there to remain for poor men to take their pennyworths out of their bones and sides with the cudgel and spur. Peacham.

As there are apoplexies from inveterate gouts, the regimen must be to translate the morbid matter upon the extremities of the body. Arbutnot.

Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,
And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.

4. To change.

One do I personate of Timon's frame,
Whom fortune with her iv'ry hand wafts to her,
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants Translates his rivals. Shakspeare.

Happy is your grace,

That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shakspeare.

5. [translator, old French.] To interpret in another language; to change into another language retaining the sense.

I can construe the action of her familiar stile, and the hardest voice of her behaviour, to be englished right, is, I am sir John Falstaff's.

—He hath studied her well, and translated her out of honesty into English. Shakspeare.

Nor word for word too faithfully translate.
Roscommon.

Read this ere you translate one bit
Of books of high renown. Swift.

Were it meant that in despite
Of art and nature such dull clods should write,
Bavius and Mævius had been sav'd by fate
For Settle and for Shadwell to translate. Duke.

6. To explain. A low colloquial use.

There's matter in these sighs, these profound heaves
You must translate; 'tis fit we understand them.

Shakspeare.

TRANSLATION. n. f. [translatio, Latin;
translation, French.]

1. Removal; act of removing.

His disease was an asthma; the cause, a metastasis or translation of humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey.

Translations of morbid matter arise in acute distempers. Arbutnot.

2. The removal of a bishop to another see.

If part of the people be somewhat in the election,
you cannot make them nulls or cyphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

The king, the next time the bishop of London came to him, entertained him with this compella-tion, My lord's grace of Canterbury, you are very welcome; and gave order for all the necessary forms for the translation. Clarendon.

3. The act of turning into another language; interpretation.

A book of his travels hath been honoured with a translation into many languages. Brown.

Nor ought a genius less than his that writ,
Attempt translation; for transplanted wit
All the defects of air and soil doth share,
And colder brains like colder climates are. Denham.
4. Something made by translation; version.
Of translations, the better I acknowledge that which cometh nearer to the very letter of the very original verity. Hooker.

TRANSLA'TIVE. adj. [translativus, Lat.]
Taken from others.

TRANSLA'TOR. n. f. [translateur, old Fr.
from translate.] One that turns any thing into another language.

A new and nobler way thou dost pursue,
To make translations and translators too. Denham.

No translation our own country ever yet produced, hath come up to that of the Old and New Testament; and I am persuaded, that the translators of the bible were masters of an English stile much fitter for that work than any we see in our present writings, the which is owing to the simplicity that runs through the whole. Swift.

TRANSLA'TORY. n. f. [from translate.] Transferring.

The translatory is a lie that transfers the merits of a man's good action to another more deserving.
Arbutnot.

TRANSLOCA'TION. n. f. [trans and locus, Latin.] Removal of things reciprocally to each other's places.

There happened certain translocations at the deluge, the matter constituting animal and vegetable substances being dissolved, and mineral matter substituted in its place, and thereby like translocation of metals in some springs. Woodward.

TRANSLU'CENCY. n. f. [from translucent.]
Diaphaneity; transparency.

Lumps of rock crystal heated red hot, then quenched in fair water, exchanged their translu-cency for whiteness, the ignition and extinction having cracked each lump into a multitude of minute bodies. Boyle.

TRANSLU'CENT. } adj. [trans and lu-
TRANSLU'CID. } cens, or lucidus, Lat.] Transparent; diaphanous; clear;
giving a passage to the light.

In anger the spirits ascend and wax eager; which is seen in the eyes, because they are translucid.
Bacon.

Wherever fountain or fresh current flow'd
Against the eastern ray, translucent, pure,
With touch æthereal of heav'n's fiery rod,
I drank. Milton.

The golden ewer a maid obsequious brings,
Replenish'd from the cool translucent springs. Pope.

TRANSMARINE. adj. [transmarinus, Lat.]
Lying on the other side of the sea;
found beyond sea.

She might have made herself mistress of Timaurantia, her next transmarine neighbour. Howel.

To TRANSMEW. v. a. [transmuto, Latin; transmuer, French.] To transmute; to transform; to metamorphose; to change.
Obsolete.

When him list the rascal routs appall,
Men into stones therewith he could transmew,
And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all. Spens.

TRANSMIGRANT. adj. [transmigrans, Lat.]
Passing into another country or state.

Besides an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pacts, there are other implicit confederations, that of colonies or transmigrants towards their mother nation. Bacon.

To TRANSMIGRATE. v. n. [transmigro, Latin.] To pass from one place or country into another.

This complexion is maintained by generation;
so that strangers contract it not, and the natives which transmigrate omit it not without commixture.
Brown.

If Pythagoras's transmigration were true, that the souls of men transmigrate into species answering their former natures, some men must live over many serpents. Brown.

Their souls may transmigrate into each other.
Howel.

Regard

The port of Luna, says our learned bard;
Who, in a drunken dream, beheld his soul
The fifth within the transmigrating roll. Dryden.

TRANSMIGRATION. n. f. [transmigration, French, from transmigrate.] Passage from one place or state into another.

The sequel of the conjunction of natures in the person of Christ is no abolishment of natural properties appertaining to either substance, no transition or transmigration thereof out of one substance into another. Hooker.

Seeing the earth of itself puts forth plants without seed, plants may well have a transmigration of species. Bacon.

From the opinion of the metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable unto their human condition, after his death, Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown.

Easing their passage hence, for intercourse
Of transmigration, as their lot shall lead. Milton.

'Twas taught by wise Pythagoras,
One soul might through more bodies pass:
Seeing such transmigration there,
She thought it not a fable here. Denham.

When thou wert form'd, heav'n did a man begin,
But the brute soul by chance was shuffled in:
In woods and wilds thy monarchy maintain,
Where valiant beasts by force and rapine, reign.
In life's next scene, if transmigration be,
Some bear or lion is reserv'd for thee. Dryden.

TRANSMISSION. n. f. [transmission, Fr.
transmissus, Latin.] The act of sending from one place to another, or from one person to another.

If there were any such notable transmission of a colony hither out of Spain, the very chronicles of Spain would not have omitted so memorable a thing.
Spenser.

Operations by transmission of spirits is one of the highest secrets in nature. Bacon.

In the transmission of the sea-water into the pits, water riseth; but in the transmission of the water through the vessels, it falleth. Bacon.

These move swiftly; but then they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon.

The uvea has a muscous power, and can dilate and contract that round hole in it called the pupil, for the moderating the transmission of light. More.

Languages of countries are lost by transmission of colonies of a different language. Hale.

This enquiry will be of use, as a parallel discovery of the transmission of the English laws into Scotland.
Hale.

Their reflexion or transmission depends on the constitution of the air and water behind the glass, and not the striking of the rays upon the parts of the glass. Newton.

TRANSMISSION. adj. [from transmissus, Latin.] Transmitted; derived from one to another.

And still the fire inculcates to his son
Transmissive lessons of the king's renown. Prior.

Itself a fun; it with transmissive light
Enlivens worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.

Then grateful Greece with streaming eyes would raise

Historick marbles to record his praise;
His praise eternal, on the faithful stone,
Had with transmissive honour grac'd his son. Pope.

To TRANSMIT. v. a. [transmitto, Latin; transmettre, French.] To send from one person or place to another.

By means of writing, former ages transmit the memorials of ancient times and things to posterity.
Hale.

He sent orders to his friend in Spain to sell his estate, and transmit the money to him. Addison.

Thus flourish'd love, and beauty reign'd in state,
Till the proud Spaniard gave this glory's date:
Past is the gallantry, the same remains,
Transmitted safe in Dryden's lofty scenes. Granv.

Shine forth, ye planets, with distinguish'd light;
Again transmit your friendly beams to earth,
As when Britannia joy'd for Anna's birth. Prior.

TRANSMITTAL. n. f. [from transmit.]
The act of transmitting; transmission.
I know not that this word has any authority.

Besides the transmittal to England of two-thirds of the revenues of Ireland, they make our country a receptacle for their supernumerary pretenders to offices. Swift.

TRANSMITTER. n. f. [from transmit.]
One that transmits.

TRANSMUTABLE. adj. [from transmutable, French; from transmute.] Capable of change; possible to be changed into another nature or substance.

It is no easy matter to demonstrate that air is so much as convertible into water; how transmutable it is unto flesh may be of deeper doubt. Brown.

The fluids and solids of an animal body are easily transmutable into one another. Arbutnot.

TRANSMUTABLY. adv. [from transmute.]
With capacity of being changed into another substance or nature.

TRANSMUTATION. n. f. [transmutation,
French; transmutatio, from transmuto,
Lat.]

1. Change into another nature or substance.
The great aim of alchemy is the trans-mutation of base metals into gold.

Am not I old Sly's son, by birth a pedlar, by education a card-maker, by transmutation a bear-herd? Shakspeare.

The transmutation of plants one into another, is inter magnalia naturæ, for the transmutation of species is, in the vulgar philosophy, pronounced impossible; but seeing there appear some manifest instances of it, the opinion of impossibility is to be rejected, and the means thereof to be found out.
Bacon.

The conversion into a body merely new, and which was not before, as silver to gold, or iron to copper, is better called, for distinction sake, transmutation.
Bacon.

The changing of bodies into light, and light into bodies, is very conformable to the course of nature, which seems delighted with transmutations. Water, which is a very fluid tasteless salt, she changes by heat into vapour, which is a sort of air, and by cold into ice, which is a hard, pellucid, brittle, fusible stone; and this stone returns into water by heat, and vapour returns into water by cold. Newton.

The supposed change of worms into flies is no real transmutation; but most of those members, which at last become visible to the eye, are existent at the beginning, artificially complicated together. Bentley.

2. Successive change. Not proper.
The same land suffereth sundry transmutations of owners within one term. Bacon.

To TRANSMUTE. v. n. [transmuto, Lat.
transmuer, Fr.] To change from one nature or substance to another.

Suidas thinks, that by the golden fleece was meant a golden book of parchment, which is of sheep's-skin, and therefore called golden, because it was taught therein how other metals might be transmuted. Raleigh.

That metals may be transmuted one into another,
I am not satisfied of the fact. Ray.

TRANSMUTER. n. f. [from transmute.]
One that transmutes.

TRANSOM. n. f. [transenna, Lat.]

1. A thwart beam or lintel over a door.
2. [Among mathematicians.] The vase of an instrument called a cross staff, being a piece of wood fixed across with a square socket upon which it slides. Bailey.

TRANSPARENCY. n. f. [transparence, Fr.
from transparent.] Clearness; diapha-neity; translucence; power of transmitting light.

A poet of another nation would not have dwelt so long upon the clearness and transparency of the stream; but in Italy one seldom sees a river that is extremely bright and limpid, most of them being muddy. Addison.

Another cause is the greater transparency of the vessels, occasioned by the thinness and delicacy of their coats. Arbutnot.

TRANSPARENT. adj. [transparent, Fr. trans and appareo, Lat.] Pervious to the light; clear; pellucid; diaphanous; translucent; not opaque.

Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light:
Thou shin'st in every tear that I do weep. Shaksp.
Wait upon him with whom you speak with your eye; for there be many wise men that have secret hearts and transparent countenances. Bacon.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As through a chrystal case the figur'd hours are seen;
And heav'n did this transparent veil provide,
Because she had no guilty thought to hide. Dryden.
Her bosom appeared all of chrystal, and so wonderfully transparent, that I saw every thought in her heart. Addison.

Transparent forms, too fine for mortal sight,
Their fluid bodies half-dissolv'd in light. Pope.

TRANSPICUOUS. adj. [trans and specio, Latin.] Transparent; pervious to the sight.

What if that light,
Sent from her through the wide transpicuous air,
To the terrestrial moon be as a star? Milton.

Now thy wine's transpicuous, purg'd from all
Its earthy gross, yet let it feed awhile
On the fat refuse. Philips.

To TRANSPIERCE. v. n. [transpercer, Fr. trans and pierce.] To penetrate; to make way through; to permeate.

A mind which through each part infus'd doth pass,
Fashions and works, and wholly doth transpierce
All this great body of the universe. Raleigh.

His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks of jointed wood,
The sides transpierce'd return'd a rattling sound,
And groans of Greeks inclos'd came issuing through the wound. Dryden.

TRANSPARATION. n. f. [transpiration, Fr.] Emission in vapour.

That a bullet dipped in oil, by preventing the transpiration of air, will carry farther, and pierce deeper, my experience cannot discern. Brown.

The transpiration of the obstructed fluids is imagined to be one of the ways that an inflammation is removed. Sharp.

To TRANSPIRE. v. a. [transpiro, Lat. transpirer, Fr.] To emit in vapour.

To TRANSPIRE. v. n. [transpirer, Fr.] 1. To be emitted by insensible vapour.

The nuts fresh got are full of a soft pulpy matter, which in time transpires and passes through the shell. Woodward.

2. To escape from secrecy to notice: a sense lately innovated from France, without necessity.

To TRANSPARE. v. a. [trans and place.] To remove; to put into a new place.

It was transplac'd from the left side of the Vatican unto a more eminent place. Wilkins.

To TRANSPLENT. v. a. [trans and planto, Lat. transplanter, French.] 1. To remove and plant in a new place.

The noblest fruits transplanted in our isle,
With early hope and fragrant blossoms smile. Roscommon.

Salopian acres flourish with a growth Peculiar, still'd the Outley; be thou first
This apple to transplant. Philips.

2. To remove and settle.

If any transplant themselves into plantations abroad, who are schismatics or outlaws, such are not fit to lay the foundation of a new colony. Bacon.

3. To remove.

Of light the greater part he took Transplanted from her cloudy shrine, and plac'd
In the sun's orb. Milton.

He prospered at the rate of his own wishes, being transplanted out of his cold barren diocese of Saint David's into a warmer climate. Clarendon.

TRANSPANTATION. n. f. [transplantation, French.]

1. The act of transplanting or removing to another soil.

It is confessed, that love changed often doth nothing; nay, it is nothing; for love, where it is kept fixed to its first object, though it burn not, yet it warms and cherishes, so as it needs no transplan-tation, or change of soil, to make it fruitful. Suckling.

2. Conveyance from one to another.

What noise have we had for some years about transplantation of diseases, and transfusion of blood! Baker.

3. Removal of men from one country to another.

Most of kingdoms have thoroughly felt the calamities of forcible transplantations, being either overwhelmed by new colonies that fell upon them, or driven, as one wave is driven by another, to seek new seats, having lost their own. Raleigh.

This appears a replication to what Menelaus had offered concerning the transplantation of Ulysses to Sparta. Broome.

TRANSPLENT. n. f. [from transplant.] One that transplants.

To TRANSPORT. v. a. [trans and porto, Lat. transporter, French.]

1. To convey by carriage from place to place.

I came hither to transport the tidings. Shaksp.
Why should she write to Edmund? might not you transport her purposes by word? Shaksp.

Rivers from one end of the world to the other,
which, among other uses, were made to transport men. Raleigh.

A subterranean wind transports a hill Torn from Pylorus. Milton.

Cæsar found the seas betwixt France and Britain so ill furnished with vessels, that he was fain to make ships to transport his army. Heylin.

In the disturbances of a state, the wise Pomponius transported all the remaining wisdom and virtue of his country into the sanctuary of peace and learning. Dryden.

2. To carry into banishment as a felon.

We return after being transported, and are ten times greater rogues than before. Swift.

3. To sentence as a felon to banishment.

4. To hurry by violence of passion.

You are transported by calamity
Thither where more attends you, and you slander
The helms o' th' state. Shaksp.

They laugh as if transported with some fit
Of passion. Milton.

I shew him once transported by the violence of a sudden passion. Dryden.

If an ally not immediately concerned contribute more than the principal party, he ought to have his share in what is conquered; or, if his romantick disposition transport him so far as to expect little or nothing, they should make it up in dignity. Swift.

5. To put into ecstasy; to ravish with pleasure.

Here transported I behold, transported touch. Milton.

Those on whom Christ bestowed miraculous cures were so transported with them, that their gratitude supplanted their obedience. Decay of Piety.

TRANSPORT. n. f. [transport, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Transportation; carriage; conveyance.

The Romans neglected their maritime affairs;
for they stipulated with the Carthaginians to furnish them with ships for transport and war. Arbutnot.

2. A vessel of carriage; particularly a vessel in which foldiers are conveyed.

Nor dares his transport vessel cross the waves,
With such whose bones are not compos'd in graves. Dryden.

Some spoke of the men of war only, and others added the transports. Arbutnot.

3. Rapture; ecstasy.

A truly pious mind receives a temporal blessing with gratitude, a spiritual one with ecstasy and transport. South.

4. A felon sentenced to exile.

TRANSPORTANCE. n. f. [from transport.]

Conveyance; carriage; removal.

O, be thou my Charon,
And give me swift transportance to those fields,
Where I may wallow in the lily beds
Propos'd for the deserfer! Shaksp.

TRANSPORTATION. n. f. [from transport.]

1. Conveyance; carriage.

Cottington and Porter had been sent before to provide a vessel for their transportation. Wotton.

2. Transmission or conveyance.

Some were not so solicitous to provide against the plague, as to know whether we had it from the malignity of our own air, or by transportation. Dryden.

3. Banishment for felony.

4. Ecstatic violence of passion.

All pleasures that affect the body must needs weary, because they transport, and all transportation is a violence; and no violence can be lasting, but determines upon the falling of the spirits. South.

TRANSPORTER. n. f. [from transport.]

One that transports.

The pilchard merchant may reap a speedy benefit by dispatching, saving, and selling to the transporters. Carew.

TRANSPORTSAL. n. f. [from transport.]

The act of putting things in each other's place. Swift.

To TRANPOSE. v. a. [transposer, Fr. transpositum, Latin.]

1. To put each in the place of other.

The letters of Elizabetha regina transposed thus, Anglia hera, beasti, signify, O England's sovereign! thou hast made us happy. Camden.

Transpose the propositions, making the medius terminus the predicate of the first, and the subject of the second. Locke.

2. To put out of place.

That which you are my thoughts cannot trans-pose; Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell. Shaksp.

TRANSPPOSITION. n. f. [transposition, Fr. from transport.]

1. The act of putting one thing in the place of another.

2. The state of being put out of one place into another.

The common centre of gravity in the terraqueous globe is steady, and not liable to any accidental transposition, nor hath it every shifted its station. Woodward.

To TRANSSHAPE. v. a. [trans and shape.]

To transform; to bring into another shape.

I'll tell thee how Beatrice prais'd thy wit: I said thou hadst a fine wit; right, said she, a fine little one: nay, said I, he hath the tongues; that I believe, said she; for he swore a thing to me on Monday night, which he forswore on Tuesday morning;
there's a double tongue: thus did the transshape thy particular virtues. Shaksp.

To TRANSUBSTANTIATE. v. a. [trans- substantier, Fr.] To change to another substance.

O self-traitor, I do bring
The spider love, which transubstantiates all,
And can convert manna to gall. Donne.

Nor seemingly, but with keen dispatch
Of real hunger, and concoctive heat
To transubstantiate; what redounds, transpires
Through spirits with ease. Milton.

TRANSUBSTANTIATION. n. f. [transub- stantiation, Fr.] A miraculous operation believed in the Romish church, in which the elements of the eucharist are supposed to be changed into the real body and blood of Christ.

How is a Romanist prepared easily to swallow, not only against all probability, but even the clear evidence of his senses, the doctrine of transubstantiation? Locke.

TRANSUDATION. n. f. [from transude.] The act of passing in sweat, or perspirable vapour, through any integument.

The drops proceeded not from the transudation of the liquors within the glass. Boyle.

To TRANSUDE. v. n. [trans and sudo, Latin.] To pass through in vapour.

Purulent fumes cannot be transmitted throughout the body before the maturation of an apothem, nor after, unless the humour break; because they cannot transude through the bag of an apothem. Harvey.

TRANSVERSAL. adj. [transversal, Fr. trans and versalis, Lat.] Running crosswise.

An ascending line, direct, as from son to father, or grandfather, is not admitted by the law of England; or in the transversal line, as to the uncle or aunt, great-uncle or great-aunt. Hale.

TRANSVERSALLY. adv. [from transversal.] In a cross direction.

There are divers subtle enquiries and demonstrations concerning the several proportions of swiftness and distance in an arrow shot vertically, horizontally, or transversally. Wilkins.

To TRANSVERSE. v. a. [transversus, Lat.] To change; to overturn.

Nothing can be believed to be religion by any people, but what they think to be divine; that is, sent immediately from God: and they can think nothing to be so, that is in the power of man to alter or transverse. Lestley.

TRANSVERSE. adj. [transversus, Lat.] Being in a cross direction.

His violent touch
Fled and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

Part in strait lines, part in transverse are found,
One forms a crooked figure, one a round;
The entrails these embrace in spiral strings,
Those clasp th' arterial tubes in tender rings. Blackmore.

What natural agent could impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are a falling! Bentley.

TRANSVERSELY. adv. [from transverse.] In a cross direction.

At Stonehenge the stones lie transversely upon each other. Stillingfleet.

In all the fibres of an animal there is a contractile power; for if a fibre be cut transversely, both the ends shrink, and make the wound gape. Arbutnot.

TRANSUMPTION. n. f. [trans and sumo, Lat.] The act of taking from one place to another.

TRANTERS. n. f. Men who carry fish from the sea-coast to sell in the inland countries. Bailey.

TRAP. n. f. [trappe, Sax. trape, Fr. trappola, Italian.]

1. A snare set for thieves or vermin.
Die as thou shouldst, but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap. Taylor.

The trap springs, and catches the ape by the fingers. L'Estrange.

2. An ambush; a stratagem to betray or catch unawares.

And lurking closely, in await now lay,
How he might any in his trap betray. Spenser.

God and your majesty Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me. Shakespeare.

They continually laid traps to ensnare him, and made sinister interpretations of all the good he did. Calamy.

He seems a trap for charity to lay,
And cons by night his lesson for the day. Dryden.

3. A play at which a ball is driven with a stick.

Unruly boys learn to wrangle at trap, or rook at span-farthing. Locke.

He that of feeble nerves and joints complains,
From nine-pins, coits, and from trap-ball abstains. King.

To TRAP. v. a. [trappan, Saxon.]

1. To ensnare; to catch by a snare or ambush; to take by stratagem.

My brain, more busy than the lab'ring spider,
Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies. Shakespeare.

If you require my deeds, with ambush'd arms
I trapp'd the foe, or tir'd with false alarms. Dryden.

2. [See TRAPPINGS.] To adorn; to decorate.

The steed that bore him
Was trapp'd with polish'd steel, all shining bright,
And cover'd with th' achievements of the knight. Spenser.

To spoil the dead of weed is sacrilege:
But leave these reliques of his living might
To deck his hearse, and trap his tomb black steed. Spenser.

Lord Lucius presented to you four milk-white horses trapt in silver. Shakespeare.

Steeds with scarlet trapp'd. Cowley.

TRAPDOOR. n. f. [trap and door.] A door opening and shutting unexpectedly.

The arteries which carry from the heart to the several parts have valves which open outward like trapdoors, and give the blood a free passage; and the veins, which bring it back to the heart, have valves and trapdoors which open inwards, so as to give way unto the blood to run into the heart. Ray.

To TRAPE. v. a. [commonly written to traipse: probably of the same original with drab.] To run idly and fluttishly about. It is used only of women.

TRAPES. n. f. [I suppose from trape.] An idle flatteringly woman.

He found the sullen trapes
Possess'd with th' devil, worms, and claps. Hudibras.

From door to door I'd sooner whine and beg,
Than marry such a trapes. Gay.

Since full each other station of renown,
Who would not be the greatest trapes in town? Young.

TRAPEZIUM. n. f. [τετραγώνιον; trapeze, Fr.] A quadrilateral figure, whose four sides are not equal, and none of its sides parallel. Diæ.

Two of the lateral trapezia are as broad. Woodward.

TRAPPINGS. n. f. [This word Minsheu derives from trap, French, cloth.]

1. Ornaments appendant to the saddle.
Caparisons and steeds,
Bases and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
At joust and tournament. Milton.

2. Ornaments; drefs; embellishments; external, superficial, and trifling decoration.
These indeed seem,
But I have that within which passeth shew;
These but the trappings and the suits of woe. Shakespeare.

He has fair words, rich trappings, and large promises; but works only for his master. L'Estrange.

The points of honour poets may produce,
Trappings of life, for ornament, not use. Dryden.

Such pageantry be to the people shown;
There boast thy horse's trappings, and thy own. Dryden.

Draw him strictly so,
That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.

In ships decay'd no mariner confides,
Lur'd by the gilded stern and painted sides;
Yet, at a ball, unthinking fools delight
In the gay trappings of a birth-day night. Spenser.

TRAPSTICK. n. f. [trap and stick.] A stick with which boys drive a wooden ball.

A foolish swoop between a couple of thick bandy legs and two long trapsticks that had no calfs. Speclator.

TRASH. n. f. [tras, Islandick; drusen, German.]

1. Any thing worthless; dross; dregs.
Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash. Shakespeare.

Look what a wardrobe here is for thee!
—Let it alone, thou fool, it is but trash. Shakespeare.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands.
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which no enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare.

More than ten Hollensheds, or Halls, or Stows,
Of trivial household trash he knows; he knows
When the queen frown'd or smil'd. Donne.

The collectors only consider, the greater fame a writer is in possession of, the more trash he may bear to have tacked to him. Swift.

Weak foolish man! will heav'n reward us there
With the same trash mad mortals wish for here? Pope.

2. A worthless person.
I suspect this trash
To be a party in this injury. Shakespeare.

3. Matter improper for food, frequently eaten by girls in the greenickness.
O that instead of trash thou 'dst taken steel! Garr.

4. I believe that the original signification of trash is the loppings of trees, from the verb.
To TRASH. v. a.

1. To lop; to crop.
Being once perfected how to grant suits,
How to deny them; whom t' advance, and whom
To trash for overtopping. Shakespeare.

2. To crush; to humble.
Not such as was fit to be imposed on hard-hearted Jews, to encumber and trash them, but such as becomes an ingenuous people. Hammond.

TRA'SHY. adj. [from trash.] Worthless; vile; usefess.

A judicious reader will discover in his closet that trashy stuff, whose glittering deceived him in the action. Dryden.

To TRA'VAIL. v. n. [travailler, Fr.]

1. To labour; to toil.

2. To be in labour; to suffer the pains of childbirth.

I travail not, nor bring forth children. Isaiah.
She being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. Revelations.

His heart is in continual labour; it travails with the obligation, and is in pangs till it be delivered. South.

To TRA'VAIL. v. a. To harass; to tire.
As if all these troubles had not been sufficient to travail the realm, a great division fell among the nobility. Hayward.

A gleam of light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton.

TRA'VAIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Labour; toil; fatigue.
As every thing of price, so this doth require travail. Hooker.

Such impotent persons as are unable for strong travail, are yet able to drive cattle to and fro to their pasture. Spenser.

2. Labour in childbirth.
In the time of her travail twins were in her. Genesis.

To procure easy travails of women, the intention is to bring down the child, but not too fast. Bacon.

TRA

TRAVER, TRA'VEL, or TRA'VISE. n. f. A wooden frame for shoeing unruly horses.

To TRA'VEL. v. n. [This word is generally supposed originally the same with travail, and to differ only as particular from general: in some writers the word is written alike in all its senses; but it is more convenient to write travail for labour, and travel for journey.]

1. To make journeys: it is used for sea as well as land, though sometimes we distinguish it from voyage, a word appropriated to the sea.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle.

In the forest shall ye lodge, O ye travelling companies of Dedanim.

Raphael deign'd to travel with Tobias.

Fain wou'd I travel to some foreign shore,
So might I to myself myself restore.

If others believed he was an Egyptian from his knowledge of their rites, it proves at least that he travelled there.

2. To pass; to go; to move.

By th' clock 'tis day;
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp.

Time travels in divers paces with divers persons;
I'll tell you who time ambles withal, who time trots withal.

Thus flying east and west, and north, and south,
News travell'd with increase from mouth to mouth.

3. To make journeys of curiosity.

Nothing tends so much to enlarge the mind as travelling, that is, making a visit to other towns, cities, or countries, beside those in which we were born and educated.

4. To labour; to toil. This should be rather travail.

If we labour to maintain truth and reason, let not any think that we travel about a matter not needful.

To TRA'VEL. v. a.

1. To pass; to journey over.

Thither to arrive,
I travel this profound.

2. To force to journey.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be charged with garrisons, and they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises.

TRA'VEL. n. f. [travail, Fr. from the noun.]

1. Journey; act of passing from place to place.

Love had cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court.
Three miles he went, nor farther could retreat,
His travels ended at his country-seat.

Mingled send into the dance
Moments fraught with all the treasures
Which thy eastern travel views.

2. Journey of curiosity or instruction.

Let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth.

Travel in the younger sort is a part of education;
in the elder, a part of experience.

In my travels I had been near their setting out in Thessaly, and at the place of their landing in Carniola.

A man not enlightened by travel or reflexion, grows as fond of arbitrary power, to which he hath been used, as of barren countries, in which he has been born and bred.

3. Labour; toil. This should be travail: as in Daniel.

He wars with a retiring enemy,
With much more travail than with victory.

TRA

What think'st thou of our empire now, though earn'd

With travel difficult?

4. Labour in childbirth. This sense belongs rather to travail.

Thy mother well deserves that short delight,
The nauseous qualms of ten long months and travel to requite.

5. TRAVELS. Account of occurrences and observations of a journey into foreign parts.

A book of his travels hath been honoured with the translation of many languages.

Histories engage the soul by sensible occurrences; as also voyages, travels, and accounts of countries.

TRA'VELLER. n. f. [travailleuse, Fr. from travel.]

1. One who goes a journey; a wayfarer.

The weary traveller wand'ring that way,
Therein did often quench his thirsty heat.

At the olive roote
They drew them then in heape, most far from foote
Of any traveller.

A little ease to these my torments give,
Before I go where all in silence mourn,
From whose dark shores no travellers return.

This was a common opinion among the gentiles, that the gods sometimes assumed human shape, and conversed upon earth with strangers and travellers.

If a poor traveller tells her, that he has neither strength, nor food, nor money left, she never bids him go to the place from whence he came.

2. One who visits foreign countries.

Farewel, monsieur traveller; look you lip and wear strange suits, and disable all the benefits of your own country.

These travellers for cloaths, or for a meale,
At all adventures, any lye will tell.

The traveller into a foreign country knows more by the eye, than he that stayeth at home can by relation of the traveller.

They are travellers newly arrived in a strange country, we should therefore not mislead them.

TRA'VELTAINED. adj. [travel and tainted.] Harassed; fatigued with travel.

I have foundered nine score and odd posts: and here, traveltainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken sir John Coleville.

TR'EVERS. adv. [Fr.] Athwart; across.

Not used.

He swears brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite travers, athwart the heart of his lover.

TRA'VERSE. adv. [à travers, Fr.] Crosswise; athwart.

Bring water from some hanging grounds in long furrows; and from those drawing it traverse to spread.

The ridges of the fallow field lay traverse.

TRA'VERSE. prep. Through crosswise.

He through the armed files
Darts his experienc'd eye, and soon traverse
The whole battalion views their order due.

TRA'VERSE. adj. [transversus, Lat. traverse, Fr.] Lying across; lying athwart.

The paths cut with traverse trenches much encumbered the carriages until the pioneers levelled them.

Oak being strong in all positions, may be trusted in cross and traverse work for summers.

TRA'VERSE. n. f.

1. Any thing laid or built cross.

The Tifan cometh with all his generation; and if there be a mother from whom the whole lineage descended, there is a traverse placed in a loft where she sitteth.

2. Something that thwarts, crosses, or obstructs; cross accident; thwarting obstacle. This is a sense rather French than English.

TRE

A just and lively picture of human nature in its actions, passions, and traverses of fortune.

He sees no defect in himself, but is satisfied that he should have carried on his designs well enough, had it not been for unlucky traverses not in his power.

To TRA'VERSE. v. a. [traverser, Fr. It was anciently accented on the last syllable.]

1. To cross; to lay athwart.

Myself, and such
As slept within the shadow of your power,
Have wander'd with our traverse arms, and breath'd
Our sufferance vainly.

The parts should be often traversed or crossed by the flowing of the folds which loosely encompass them, without sitting too straight.

2. To cross by way of opposition; to thwart with obstacles.

This treatise has, since the first conception thereof, been often traversed with other thoughts.

John Bull thought himself now of age to look after his own affairs; Frog resolved to traverse this new project, and to make him uneasy in his own family.

3. To oppose; to cross by an objection.

A law term.

You save th' expence of long litigious laws,
Where suits are travers'd, and so little won,
That he who conquers is but last undone.

Without a good skill in history, and a new geography to understand him aright, one may lose himself in traversing the decree.

4. To wander over; to cross.

He many a walk travers'd
Of stateliest covert, cedar, pine, or palm.

He that shall traverse over all this habitable earth, with all those remote corners of it, reserved for the discovery of these later ages, may find some nations without cities, schools, houses, garments, coin; but not without their God.

The lion smarting with the hunter's spear,
Though deeply wounded, no way yet dismay'd,
In fullen fury traverses the plain,

To find the vent'rous foe.

Believe me, prince, there's not an African
That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practises these boasted virtues.

What seas you travers'd, and what fields you fought!

5. To survey; to examine thoroughly.

My purpose is to traverse the nature, principles, and properties, of this detestable vice, ingratitude.

To TRA'VERSE. v. n. To use a posture of opposition in fencing.

To see thee fight, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there.

TRA'VESTY. adj. [travesti, Fr.] Dressed so as to be made ridiculous; burlesqued.

TRAUMA'TICK. adj. [τραυματικός.] Vulnerary; useful to wounds.

I deterged and disposed the ulcer to incarn, and to do so I put the patient into a traumatick decoction.

TRAY. n. f. [tray, Swedish.] A shallow wooden vessel in which meat or fish is carried.

Sift it into a tray or bole of wood.

No more her care shall fill the hollow tray,
To fat the guzzling hogs with floods of whey.

TRAY'TRIP. n. f. A play, I know not of what kind.

I shall play my freedom at traytrip, and become thy bond slave.

TREACHEROUS. adj. [from treachery.] Faithless; perfidious; guilty of deserting or betraying.

He bad the lion to be remitted
Unto his seat, and those same treacherous vile
Be punished for their presumptuous guile.

Desire in rapture gaz'd awhile,
And saw the treach'rous goddess smile. Swift.
TREACHEROUSLY. adv. [from treacherous.] Faithlessly; perfidiously; by treason; by dishonest stratagem.

Then 'gan Carausius tyrannize anew,
And him Alectus treacherously slew,
And took on him the robe of emperor. Spenser.
Thou hast slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry,
And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him. Shakspeare.

Let others freeze with angling reeds,
Or treacherously poor fish beset
With strangling snare, or winding net. Donne.
I treated, trusted you, and thought you mine;
When, in requital of my best endeavours,
You treacherously practis'd to undo me,
Seduc'd my only child, and stole her. Otway.
They bid him strike, to appease the ghost
Of his poor father treacherously lost. Dryden.

TREACHEROUSNESS. n. f. [from treacherous.] The quality of being treacherous; perfidiousness.

TREACHERY. n. f. [tricherie, Fr.] Perfidy; breach of faith.

TREACHETOR. } n. f. [from tricher, tri-TREACHOUR. } cheur, Fr.] A traitor; one who betrays; one who violates his faith or allegiance. Not in use.

Good Claudius with him in battle fought,
In which the king was by a treachetour
Disguis'd slain. Spenser.

Where may that treachour then be found,
Or by what means may I his footing track? Spenser.

TREACLE. n. f. [triacle, Fr. triackle, Dutch; theriaca, Lat.]

1. A medicine made up of many ingredients.

The physician that has observed the medicinal virtues of treacle, without knowing the nature of each of the sixty odd ingredients, may cure many patients with it. Boyle.

Treacle water has much of an acid in it. Floyer.

2. Molasses; the spume of sugar.

To TREAD. v. n. pret. trod; part. pass. trodden. [trudan, Gothick; trēdan, Sax. treden, Dutch.]

1. To set the foot.

He ne'er drinks,
But Timon's silver treads upon his lip. Shakspeare.

Those which perfume the air most, being trodden upon and crushed, are burnet, wild thyme, and water mint; therefore set whole alleys of them, to have the pleasure when you walk or tread. Bacon.

Those dropping gums
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milton.

Where'er you tread, the blushing flow'rs shall rise. Pope.

2. To trample; to set the feet in scorn or malice.

Thou
Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our street, or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm. Shakspeare.
Thou shalt tread upon their high places. Deuteronomy.

3. To walk with form or state.

When he walks, he moves like an engine,
And the ground shrinks before his treading. Shakspeare.

Ye that stately tread, or lowly creep. Milton.

4. To copulate as birds.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws;
When turtles tread. Shakspeare.
What distance between the treading or coupling,
and the laying of the egg? Bacon.
They bill, they tread; Alcione, compress'd,
Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest. Dryden.

To TREAD. v. a.

1. To walk on; to feel under the foot.

Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it! Shakspeare.
He dy'd obedient to severest law;
Forbid to tread the promis'd land he saw. Prior.

2. To press under the foot.

Tread the snuff out on the floor to prevent stinking. Swift.

3. To beat; to track.

Full of briars is this working world.
—They are but burs: if we walk not in the trodden paths, our very petticoats will catch them. Shakspeare.

4. To walk on in a formal or stately manner.

Methought she trod the ground with greater grace. Dryden.

5. To crush under foot; to trample in contempt or hatred.

Through thy name will we tread them under that rise against us. Psalms.

Why was I rais'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travell'd,
'Till all my fires were spent; and then cast downward
To be trod out by Cæsar? Dryden.

6. To put in action by the feet.

They tread their wine-presses, and suffer thirst. Job.

7. To love as the male bird the female.

He feather'd her and trod her. Dryden.

TREAD. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Footing; step with the foot

If the streets were pav'd with thine eyes,
Her feet were much too dainty for such tread. Shakspeare.

The quaint mazes in the wanton green,
For want of tread, are undistinguishable. Milton.
High above the ground
Their march was, and the passive air upbore
Their nimble tread. Milton.

The dancer on the rope, with doubtful tread,
Gets wherewithal to clothe and buy him bread. Dryden.

How wert thou wont to walk with cautious tread,
A dish of tea, like milk-pail, on thy head! Swift.

2. Way; track; path.

Cromwell is the king's secretary; further,
Stands in the gap and tread for more preferment. Shakspeare.

3. The cock's part in the egg.

TREADER. n. f. [from tread.] He who treads.

The treaders shall tread out no wine in their presses. Isaiab.

TREADLE. n. f. [from tread.]

1. A part of an engine on which the feet act to put it in motion.

The farther the fore-end of the treadle reaches out beyond the fore-side of the lathe, the greater will the sweep of the fore-end of the treadle be, and consequently the more revolutions are made at one tread. Moxon.

2. The sperm of the cock.

Whether it is not made out of the garm, or treadle of the egg, seemeth of lesser doubt. Brown.
At each end of the egg is a treadle, formerly thought to be the cock's sperm. Derham.

TREASON. n. f. [trahison, Fr.] An offence committed against the dignity and majesty of the commonwealth.

It is divided into high treason and petit treason. High treason is an offence against the security of the commonwealth, or of the king's majesty, whether by imagination, word, or deed; as to compass or imagine treason, or the death of the prince, or the queen consort, or his son and heir-apparent; or to deflower the king's wife, or his eldest daughter unmarried, or his eldest son's wife; or levy war against the king in his realm, or to adhere to his enemies by aiding them; or to counterfeit the king's great seal, privy seal, or money; or knowingly to bring false money into this realm counterfeited like the money of England, and to utter the same; or to kill the king's chancellor, treasurer, justice of the one bench or of the other; justices in eyre, justices of assize, justices of oyer and terminer, when in their place and doing their duty; or forging the king's seal manual, or privy signet; or diminishing or impairing the current money; and in such treason, a man forfeits his lands and goods to the king; and it is called treason paramount. Petit treason is when a servant kills his master, a wife or husband; a clerk secular or religious kills his prelate: this treason gives forfeiture to every lord within his own fee: both treasons are capital. Cowell.

He made the overture of thy treason to us. Shakspeare.

Man disobeying,

Disloyal breaks his fealty, and sins
Against the high supremacy of heaven:

To expiate his treason hath nought left. Milton.

This being a treason against God, by a commerce with his enemy. Holyday.

Athaliah cried, Treason, treason. 2 Kings.

TREASONABLE. } adj. [from treason.]
TREASONOUS. } Having the nature or guilt of treason. Treasonous is out of use.

Him by proofs as clear as founts in July
I know to be corrupt and treasonous. Shakspeare.

Against th' undivulg'd pretence I fight
Of treas'nous malice. Shakspeare.

Most men's heads had been intoxicated with imaginations of plots and treasonable practices. Clarendon.

Were it a draught for Juno when she banquets,
I would not taste thy treasonous offer. Milton.

A credit to run ten millions in debt without parliamentary security is dangerous, illegal, and perhaps treasonable. Swift.

TREASURE. n. f. [tresor, Fr. thesaurus, Lat.] Wealth hoarded; riches accumulated.

An inventory, importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs. Shakspeare.

He used his laws as well for collecting of treasure, as for correcting of manners. Bacon.

Gold is treasure as well as silver, because not decaying, and never sinking much in value. Lace.

To TREASURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To hoard; to reposit; to lay up.

After thy hardness and impenitent heart, thou treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath. Romans.

Practical principles are treasured up in man's mind, that, like the candle of the Lord in the heart of every man, discovers what he is to do, and what to avoid. South.

No: my remembrance treasures honest thoughts,
And holds not things like thee; I scorn thy friendship. Rome.

Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere,
Since all things lost on earth are treasur'd there. Pope.

TREASUREHOUSE. n. f. [treasure and house.] Place where hoarded riches are kept.

Let there be any grief or disease incident to the soul of men, for which there is not in this treasurehouse a present comfortable remedy to be found. Hooker.

Thou silver treasurehouse,

Tell me once more, what title dost thou bear? Shakspeare.

Gather together into your spirit, and in treasurehouse the memory, not only all the promises of God, but also the former senses of the divine favours. Taylor.

TREASURER. n. f. [from treasure; tresrier, Fr.] One who has care of money; one who has charge of treasure.

This is my treasurer, let him speak
That I have reserv'd nothing. Shakspeare.

Before the invention of laws, private affections in supreme rulers made their own fancies both their treasurers and hangmen, weighing in this balance good and evil. Raleigh.

TREASURESHP. n. f. [from treasurer.]

Office or dignity of treasurer.

TRE

He preferred a base fellow, who was a suitor for the *treasurer's*hip, before the most worthy.

Hakewill.

TREASURY. n. f. [from treasure; tresorerie, Fr.]

1. A place in which riches are accumulated.

And yet I know not how conceit may rob

The treasury of life, when life itself

Yields to the theft.

Shakspeare.

Ulysses' goods. A very treasure

Of brags, and gold, and Steele of curious frame.

Chapman.

He had a purpose to furnish a fair case in that university with choice collections from all parts, like that famous treasury of knowledge at Oxford.

Wotton.

The state of the treasury the king best knows.

Temple.

Physicians, by treasuries of just observations, grow to skill in the art of healing.

Watts.

2. It is used by Shakspeare for treasure.

And make his chronicle as rich with prize,

As is the ouzy bottom of the sea

With sunken wreck and sumless treasuries.

Shakspeare.

Thy sumptuous buildings

Have cost a mass of publick treasury.

Shakspeare.

TO TREAT. v. a. [traiter, Fr. trato, Latin.]

1. To negotiate; to settle.

To treat the peace, a hundred senators

Shall be commissioned.

Dryden.

2. [trato, Lat.] To discourse on.

3. To use in any manner, good or bad.

He treated his prisoner with great harshness.

Spektator.

Since living virtue is with envy curs'd,

And the best men are treated like the worst;

Do thou, just goddess, call our merits forth,

And give each deed th' exact, intrinsic worth.

Pope.

4. To handle; to manage; to carry on.

Zeuxis and Polygnatus treated their subjects in their pictures, as Homer did in his poetry.

Dryden.

5. To entertain without expence to the guest.

TO TREAT. v. n. [traiter, Fr. trahian, Saxon.]

1. To discourse; to make discussions.

Of love they treat till th' ev'ning star appear'd.

Milton.

Absence, what the poets call death in love, has given occasion to beautiful complaints in those authors who have treated of this passion in verse.

Addison.

2. To practise negotiation.

The king treated with them.

2 Maccabees.

3. To come to terms of accommodation.

You, master Dean, frequent the great,

Inform us, will the emp'ror treat?

Swift.

4. To make gratuitous entertainments.

If we do not please, at least we treat.

Prior.

TREAT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An entertainment given.

This is the ceremony of my fate:

A parting treat, and I'm to die in state.

Dryden.

He pretends a great concern for his country, and insight into matters: now such professions, when recommended by a treat, dispose an audience to hear reason.

Collier.

What tender maid but must a victim fall

For one man's treat, but for another's ball?

Pope.

2. Something given at an entertainment.

Dry figs and grapes, and wrinkled dates were set

In canister's t' enlarge the little treat.

Dryden.

The king of gods revolving in his mind

Lycan's guilt and his inhuman treat.

Dryden.

TREATABLE. adj. [traitable, Fr.] Moderate; not violent.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than be suddenly cut off in a moment, rather to be taken than snatched away.

Hooker.

The heats or the colds of seasons are less treatable than with us.

Temple.

VOL. II.

TRE

TREATISE. n. f. [tractatus, Lat.] Discourse; written tractate.

The time has been, my fell of hair

Would at a dismal treatise rouze and stir

As life were in't.

Shakspeare.

Besides the rules given in this treatise to make a perfect judgment of good pictures, there is required

a long conversation with the best pieces.

Dryden.

TREATMENT. n. f. [traitement, French.]

Usage; manner of using, good or bad,

Scarce an humour or character which they have not used; all comes waisted to us; and were they to entertain this age, they could not now make such plenteous treatment.

Dryden.

Accept such treatment as a swain affords.

Pope.

TREATY. n. f. [traité, French.]

1. Negotiation; act of treating.

She began a treaty to procure,

And stablish terms betwixt both their requests.

Spenser.

He cast by treaty and by trains

Her to persuade.

Spenser.

2. A compact of accommodation relating to public affairs.

A peace was concluded, being rather a bargain than a treaty.

Bacon.

Echion then

Lets fall the guiltless weapon from his hand,

And with the rest a peaceful treaty makes.

Addison.

3. [for entreaty.] Supplication; petition; solicitation.

I must

To the young man send humble treaties, dog,

And palter in the shift of lowness.

Shakspeare.

TREBLE. adj. [triple, French; triplex, Latin.]

1. Threefold; triple.

Some I see,

That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry.

Who can

His head's huge doors unlock, whose jaws with great

And dreadful teeth in treble ranks are set?

All his malice serv'd but to bring forth

Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy shewn

On man by him seduc'd; but on himself

Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance pour'd.

Milton.

A lofty tow'r, and strong on ev'ry side

With treble walls.

Dryden.

The pious Trojan then his jav'lin sent,

The shield gave way; through treble plates it went

Of solid brags.

Dryden.

2. Sharp of sound. A musical term.

The sharper or quicker percussive of air causeth

the more treble sound, and the lower or heavier the base sound.

Bacon.

TO TREBLE. v. a. [from the adjective; triplico, Latin; tripler, French.] To multiply by three; to make thrice as much.

She conceiv'd, and trebling the due time,

Brought forth this monstrous mass.

Spenser.

I would not be ambitious in my wish,

To wish myself much better; yet for you,

I would be trebled twenty times myself,

A thousand times more fair.

Shakspeare.

Aquarius shines with feeble rays,

Four years he trebles, and doubles six score days.

Creech.

TO TREBLE. v. n. To become threefold.

Whoever annually runs out, as the debt doubles and trebles upon him, so doth his inability to pay it.

Swift.

TREBLE. n. f. A sharp sound.

The treble cutteth the air so sharp, as it returneth too swift to make the sound equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest.

Bacon.

The lute still trembles underneath thy nail:

At thy well-sharpen'd thumb, from shore to shore,

The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar.

Dryden.

TREBLENESS. n. f. [from treble.] The state of being treble.

The just proportion of the air percussed towards the baseness or trebleness of tones, is a great secret

in sounds.

Bacon.

TRE

TREBLY. adv. [from treble.] Thrice told; in threefold number or quantity.

His jav'lin sent,

The shield gave way; through treble plates it went

Of solid brags, of linnen trebly roll'd.

Dryden.

The seed being so necessary for the maintenance of the several species, it is in some doubly and trebly defended.

Ray.

TREE. n. f. [trie, Islandick; tree, Danish.]

1. A large vegetable, rising with one woody stem to a considerable height.

Trees and shrubs, of our native growth in England, are distinguished by Ray. 1. Such as have their flowers disjointed and remote from the fruit; and these are, 1. Nuciferous ones; as, the walnut tree, the hazel nut tree, the beech, the chestnut, and the common oak. 2. Coniferous ones; of this kind are the Scotch firs, male and female; the pine, the common alder tree, and the birch tree. 3. Bacci-ferous; as, the juniper and yew trees. 4. Lanige-rous ones; as, the black, white, and trembling poplar, willows, and others of all kinds. 5. Such as bear their seeds, having an imperfect flower, in leafy membranes; as, the horse bean. 6. Such as have their fruits and flowers contiguous; of these some are pomiferous; as, apples and pears: and some bacciferous; as, the sorb or service tree, the white or hawthorn, the wild rose, sweet brier, currants, the great bilberry bush, honeysuckle, ivy. Pruniferous ones, whose fruit is pretty large and soft, with a stone in the middle; as, the black thorn or sloe tree, the black and white bullace tree, the black cherry, &c.

Bacciferous ones; as, the strawberry tree in the west of Ireland, milletoe, water elder, large laurel, the viburnum or wayfaring tree, the dog berry tree, the sea black thorn, the berry-bearing elder, the privet

berberry, common elder, the holly, the buckthorn,

the berry-bearing heath, the bramble, and spindle tree or prickwood. Such as have their fruit dry when ripe; as, the bladder nut tree, the box tree,

the common elm and ash, the maple, the gaul or sweet willow, common heath, broom, dyers wood, furze or gorse, the lime tree, &c.

Miller.

Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish,

A forked mountain, or blue promontory

With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,

And mock our eyes with air.

Shakspeare.

Who can bid the tree unfix his earth-bound root.

Shakspeare.

It is pleasant to look upon a tree in summer covered with green leaves, decked with blossoms, or laden with fruit, and casting a pleasant shade: but to consider how this tree sprang from a little seed, how nature shaped and fed it till it came to this greatness, is a more rational pleasure.

Burnet.

Trees shoot up in one great stem, and at a good distance from the earth spread into branches: thus gooseberries are shrubs, and oaks are trees.

Locke.

2. Any thing branched out.

Vain are their hopes who fancy to inherit,

By trees of pedigrees, or fame or merit;

Though plodding heralds through each branch may trace

Old captains and dictators of their race.

Dryden.

TREE germander. n. f. A plant.

TREE of life. n. f. [lignum vitæ, Latin.]

An evergreen: the wood is esteemed by turners.

TRE

Hope, by the ancients, was drawn in the form of a sweet and beautiful child standing upon tiptoes, and a trefoil or three-leaved grass in her hand.

Some sow trefoil or rye-grass with their clover.

TRE'ILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A contexture of pales to support espaliers, making a distinct inclosure of any part of a garden.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: makers of flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonneteers; contrivers of bowers, grottos, treilages, and cascades, are romance writers.

TRE'LLIS. n. f. [French.] A structure of iron, wood, or osier, the parts crossing each other like a lattice.

To TRE'MBLE. v. n. [trembler, French; tremo, Latin.]

1. To shake as with fear or cold; to shiver; to quake; to shudder.

My compassionate heart
Will not permit my eyes once to behold
The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise.

And power thou tremblest at.

Shew your slaves how cholerick you are,
And make your bondmen tremble.

When he heard the king, he fell into such a trembling that he could hardly speak.

Frighted Turnus trembled as he spoke.

He shook the sacred honours of his head,
With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distil.

Ye pow'rs, revenge your violated altars,
That they who with unhallow'd hands approach
May tremble.

2. To quiver; to totter.

Sinai's grey top shall tremble.

We cannot imagine a mass of water to have stood upon the middle of the earth like one great drop, or a trembling jelly, and all the places about it dry.

3. To quaver; to shake as a sound.

Winds make a noise unequally, and sometimes, when vehement, tremble at the height of their blast.

TRE'MBLINGLY. adv. [from trembling.]

So as to shake or quiver.

Tremblingly she stood,
And on the sudden dropt.

Say, what the use, were finer opticks giv'n,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n:
Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
To smart and agonize at every pore?

TRE'MENDOUS. adj. [tremendus, Latin.]

Dreadful; horrible; astonishingly terrible.

There stands an altar where the priest celebrates some mysteries sacred and tremendous.

In that portal should the chief appear,
Each hand tremendous with a brazen spear.

TRE'MOUR. n. f. [tremor, Latin.]

1. The state of trembling.

He fell into an universal tremour of all his joints, that when going his legs trembled under him.

By its styptick and stimulating quality it affects the nerves, occasioning tremours.

2. Quivering or vibratory motion.

These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture tremble each of them apart, and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremours, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye.

TRE'MULOUS. adj. [tremulus, Latin.]

1. Trembling; fearful.

The tender tremulous christian is easily distracted and amazed by them.

2. Quivering; vibratory.

He owned to have some kind of little discomposure in the choice of things perfectly indifferent;

TRE

for where there was nothing to determine him, the balance by hanging even became tremulous.

Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, impresses a swift tremulous motion in the lips, tongue, or palate, which breath passing smooth does not.

As thus th' effulgence tremulous I drink,
The lambent lightnings shoot across the sky.

TRE'MULOUSNESS. n. f. [from tremulous.]

The state of quivering.

TREN. n. f. A fish spear.

To TRENCH. v. a. [trancher, Fr.]

1. To cut.

Safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head.

This weak impress of love is as a figure Trench'd in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form.

2. To cut or dig into pits or ditches.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the spring.

First draw thy faulchion, and on ev'ry side
Trench the black earth a cubit long and wide.

The trenching plough or coulter is useful in pasture-ground, to cut out the sides of trenches or drains.

3. To fortify by earth thrown up.

Pioneers with spades and pickax arm'd,
Forerun the royal camp to trench a field.

TRENCH. n. f. [tranche, Fr.]

1. A pit or ditch.

On that coast build,
And with a trench enclose the fruitful field.

When you have got your water up to the highest part of the land, make a small trench to carry some of the water in, keeping it always upon a level.

2. Earth thrown up to defend soldiers in their approach to a town, or to guard a camp.

The citizens of Corioli have issued forth
And given to Lartius and to Marcius battle:
I saw our party to the trenches driven,
And then I came away.

William carries on the trench,
Till both the town and castle yield.

TRE'NCHANT. adj. [trenchant, Fr.] Cutting; sharp.

He fiercely took his trenchant blade in hand,
With which he struck so furious and so fell,
That nothing seem'd the puissance could withstand.

Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
Were sharp and trenchant, not their words.

TRE'NCHER. n. f. [from trench; trenchoir, French.]

1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.

No more
I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish.

My estate deserves an heir more rais'd
Than one which holds a trencher.

When we find our dogs, we set the dish or trencher on the ground.

Their homely fare dispatch'd; the hungry band
Invade their trenchers next, and soon devour.

Many a child may have the idea of a square trencher, or round plate, before he has any idea of infinite.

2. The table.

How often hast thou,
Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board
When I have feasted!

3. Food; pleasures of the table.

It could be no ordinary declension of nature that could bring some men, after an ingenuous education, to place their summum bonum upon their trenchers, and their utmost felicity in wine.

TRE'NCHERFLY. n. f. [trencher and fly.]

One that haunts tables; a parasite.

He found all people came to him promiscuously, and he tried which of them were friends, and which only trencherflies and spongers.

TRE

TRE'NCHERMAN. n. f. [trencher and man.]

1. A cook. Obsolete.

Palladius assured him, that he had already been more fed to his liking than he could be by the skillfullest trenchermen of Media.

2. A feeder; an eater.

You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he's a very valiant trencherman; he hath an excellent stomach.

TRE'NCHERMATE. n. f. [trencher and mate.] A table companion; a parasite.

Because that judicious learning of the ancient sages doth not in this case serve the turn, these trenchermates frame to themselves a way more pleasant; a new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery, an art of contradiction by way of scorn.

To TREND. v. n. To tend; to lie in any particular direction. It seems a corruption of tend.

The scouts to several parts divide their way,
To learn the natives names, their towns, explore
The coasts and trendings of the crooked shore.

TRE'NDLE. n. f. [trindel, Saxon.] Any thing turned round. Now improperly written trundle.

TRE'NTALS. n. f. [trente, Fr.]

Trentals or trigintals were a number of masses, to the tale of thirty, said on the same account, according to a certain order instituted by Saint Gregory.

TREPA'N. n. f. [trepan, Fr.]

1. An instrument by which chirurgeons cut out round pieces of the skull.

2. A snare; a stratagem by which any one is ensnared. [Of this signification Skinner assigns for the reason, that some English ships in queen Elizabeth's reign being invited, with great show of friendship, into Trapani, a part of Sicily, were there detained.]

But what a thoughtless animal is man,
How very active in his own trepan!

Can there be any thing of friendship in snares, hooks, and *trepan*s?

During the commotion of the blood and spirits, in which passion consists, whatsoever is offered to the imagination in favour of it, tends only to deceive the reason: it is indeed a real trepan upon it, feeding it with colours and appearances instead of arguments.

To TREPA'N. v. a. [from the noun; trepaner, French.]

1. To perforate with the trepan.

A putrid matter flowed forth her nostrils, of the same smell with that in trepanning the bone.

Few recovered of those that were trepanned.

2. To catch; to ensnare.

They trepann'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own.

Those are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invited with authority but bereaved of power, which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous.

TREPHI'NE. n. f. A small trepan; a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.

I shewed a trepan and trepbine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull.

TREPIDA'TION. n. f. [trepidatio, Lat.]

1. The state of trembling, or quivering.

The bow tortureth the string continually, and holdeth it in a continual trepidation.

All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirits to retire; upon which the parts, in some degree, are destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and fears,
Men reckon what it did and meant;

TRE

But trepidation of the spheres,
Though greater far, is innocent. Donne.
They pass the planets sev'n, and pass the fix'd,
And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs
The trepidation talk'd, and that first mov'd. Milton.

2. State of terrour.

Because the whole kingdom stood in a zealous trepidation of the absence of such a prince, I have been the more desirous to research the several passages of the journey. Wotton.

His first action of note was in the battle of Lepanto; where the success of that great day, in such trepidation of the state, made every man meritorious. Wotton.

3. Hurry; confused haste.

TRE'PASS. v. n. [trespasser, Fr.]

1. To transgress; to offend.

If they shall confess their trespasss which they trespassed against me, I will remember my covenant. Leviticus.

They not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but trespass against all logick. Norris.

2. To enter unlawfully on another's ground.

Their morals and æconomy
Most perfectly they made agree:
Each virtue kept its proper bound,
Nor trespass'd on the other's ground. Prior.

TRE'PASS. n. f. [trespas, French.]

1. Transgression; offence.

Your purpos'd low correction
Is such, as basest and the meanest wretches
For pilf'rings, and most common trespass, Are punish'd with. Shakspeare.

Will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass? Milton.

2. Unlawful entrance on another's ground.

TRE'PASSER. n. f. [from trespass.]

1. An offender; a transgressor.

2. One who enters unlawfully on another's ground.

If I come upon another's ground without his licence, or the licence of the law, I am a trespasser, for which the owner may have an action of trespass against me. Walton.

TRE'SSED. adj. [from treffe, Fr.] Knotted or curled.

Nor this nor that so much doth make me mourn,
But for the lad, whom long I lov'd so dear,
Now loves a lass that all his love doth scorn,
He plunged in pain, his treffed locks doth tear. Spenser.

TRE'SSES. n. f. without a singular. [treffe, Fr. treccia, Ital.] A knot or curl of hair.

Hung be the heav'ns with black, yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal treffes in the sky! Shakspeare.

Naked, met his under the flowing gold
Of her loose treffes hid. Milton.

Adam had wove
Of choicest flow'rs a garland to adorn
Her treffes, and her rural labours crown. Milton.

Fair treffes man's imperial race ensnare,
And beauty draws us with a single hair. Pope.

Then cease, bright nymph! to mourn the ravish'd hair,

Which adds new glory to the shining sphere!
Not all the treffes that fair hair can boast Shall draw such envy as the lock you lost. Pope.

TRE'STLE. n. f. [treteau, French.]

1. The frame of a table.

2. A moveable form by which any thing is supported.

TRET. n. f. [probably from tritus, Lat.]

An allowance made by merchants to retailers, which is four pounds in every hundred weight, and four pounds for waste or refuse of a commodity. Bailey.

TRE'THINGS. n. f. [trethingi, low Latin,

TRI

from trethu, Welsh, to tax.] Taxes; imposts.

TRE'VET. n. f. [тревѣт, Saxon; trepiet, Fr.] Any thing that stands on three legs: as, a stool.

TREY. n. f. [tres, Lat. trois, Fr.] A three at cards.

White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
—Honey, milk and sugar; there is three.

—Nay then, two treys; metheglin, wort, and malmsey. Shakspeare.

TRI'ABLE. adj. [from try.]

1. Possible to be experimented; capable of trial.

For the more easy understanding of the experiments triable by our engine, I insinuated that notion, by which all of them will prove explicable. Boyle.

2. Such as may be judicially examined.

No one should be admitted to a bishop's chancellorship without good knowledge in the civil and canon laws, since divers causes triable in the spiritual court are of weight. Ayliffe.

TRI'AD. n. f. [trias, Lat. triade, Fr.] Three united.

TRI'AL. n. f. [from try.]

1. Test; examination.

With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart. Shakspeare.

2. Experiment; act of examining by experience.

I leave him to your gracious acceptance,
Whose trial shall better publish his commendation. Shakspeare.

Skilful gardeners make trial of the seeds by putting them into water gently boiled; and if good, they will sprout within half an hour. Baron.

There is a mixed kind of evidence relating both to the senses and understanding, depending upon our own observation and repeated trials of the issues and events of actions or things, called experience. Wilkins.

3. Experience; experimental knowledge.

Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Hebrews.

4. Judicial examination.

Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the laws of our realm: the trial is the issue, which is tried upon the inditement, not the inditement itself. Corwell.

He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of publick power. Shakspeare.

A canon of the Jews required, in all suits and judicial trials betwixt rich and poor, that either each should stand, or both should sit. Kettlerwell.

They shall come upon their trial, have all their actions strictly examined. Nelson.

5. Temptation; test of virtue.

Left our trial, when least sought,
May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,
The willing I go. Milton.

No such company as them thou saw'st Intended thee; for trial only brought,
To see how thou couldst judge of fit and meet. Milton.

Every station is exposed to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears. Rogers.

6. State of being tried.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.
—It is to be all made of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service,
All humbleness, all patience and impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakspeare.

TRI'ANGLE. n. f. [triangle, Fr. triangulum, Lat.] A figure of three angles.

The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones. Locke.

TRI'ANGULAR. adj. [triangularis, Lat.]

Having three angles.

TRI

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular; O work divine!
These two the first and last proportions are. Spenser.
Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey, and convenient for the bee; yet did she not chuse that, because there must have been triangular spaces left void. Ray.

TRIBE. n. f. [tribus, Lat. from treu,

British; b and v being labials of promiscuous use in the ancient British words: treu from tir of, his lands, is supposed by Rowland to be Celtick, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government. This notion will not be much recommended, when it is told, that he derives centurie from treu, supposing it to be the same with our centrev, importing a hundred treus or tribes.]

1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other characteristic.

I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes And centuries for their voices, to help Catiline In his election. Ben Jonson.

If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the misled multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable. Bacon.

Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank
Your tribes, and water from th' ambrosial fount? Milton.

Teach straggling mountaineers, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build. Tate.

I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners. Addison.

2. It is often used in contempt.

Folly and vice are easy to describe,
The common subjects of our scribbling tribe. Recommon.

TRI'BLET or TRIBO'ULET. n. f. A goldsmith's tool for making rings. Ainsw.

TRIBULATION. n. f. [tribulation, Fr.]

Persecution; distress; vexation; disturbance of life.

Tribulation being present causeth sorrow, and being imminent breedeth fear. Hooker.

The just shall dwell,
And, after all their tribulations long,
See golden days fruitful of golden deeds. Milton.

Death becomes
His final remedy; and after life
Try'd in sharp tribulation, and refin'd.

By faith, and faithful works. Milton.

Our church taught us to pray, that God would, not only in all time of our tribulation, but in all time of our wealth, deliver us. Atterbury.

TRIBUNAL. n. f. [tribunal, Latin and French.]

1. The seat of a judge.

I' th' market place, on a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself in chairs of gold
Were publickly enthron'd. Shakspeare.

He sees the room
Where the whole nation does for justice come,
Under whose large roof flourishes the gown,
And judges grave on high tribunals frown. Waller.

There is a necessity of standing at his tribunal, who is infinitely wise and just. Grew.

He, who for our sakes stood before an earthly tribunal, might therefore be constituted judge of the whole world. Nelson.

2. A court of justice.

Summoning arch-angels to proclaim Thy dread tribunal. Milton.

TRI'BUNE. n. f. [tribun, tribunus, Lat.]

1. An officer of Rome chosen by the people.

These are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' th' common mouth: I do despise them. Shakspeare.

2. The commander of a Roman legion.
TRIBUNI'TIAL. } adj. [tribunitius, Lat.]
TRIBUNI'TIOUS. } Suiting a tribune; relating to a tribune.

Let them not come in multitudes, or in a tribunitious manner; for that is to clamour counsels, not to inform. Bacon.

Oh happy ages of our ancestors!

Beneath the kings and tribunitial powers,
 One jail did all their criminals restrain. Dryden.

TRI'BUTARY. adj. [tributaire, Fr. tributarius, Latin.]

1. Paying tribute as an acknowledgment of submission to a master.

Thenceforth this land was tributary made

T' ambitious Rome, and did their rule obey,

Till Arthur all that reckoning did defray:

Yet oft the Briton kings against them strongly sway'd. Spenser.

Whilst Malvern, king of hills, fair Severn overlooks,

Attended on in state with tributary brooks. Drayton.

The two great empires of the world I know;
 And since the earth none larger does afford,

This Charles is some poor tributary lord. Dryden.

Around his throne the sea-born brothers stood,

That swell with tributary urns his flood. Pope.

2. Subject; subordinate.

These he, to grace his tributary gods,
 By course commits to several government,

And gives them leave to wear their saphire crowns,
 And wield their little tridents. Milton.

O'er Judah's king ten thousand tyrants reign,

Legions of lust, and various pow'rs of ill

Insult the master's tributary will. Prior.

3. Paid in tribute.

Nor flatt'ry tunes these tributary lays. Concanen.

TRI'BUTARY. n. f. [from tribute.] One who pays a stated sum in acknowledgment of subjection.

All the people therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and serve thee. Deuteronomy.

The Irish lords did only promise to become tributaries to king Henry the second: and such as only pay tribute are not properly subjects, but sovereigns.

Davies.

TRIBUTE. n. f. [tribut, Fr. tributum, Lat.] Payment made in acknowledgment; subjection.

They that received tribute money said, Doth not your master pay tribute? Matthew.

She receives

As tribute warmth and light. Milton.

To acknowledge this, was all he did exact;

Small tribute, where the will to pay was act.
Dryden.

TRICE. n. f. [I believe this word comes from trait, Fr. corrupted by pronunciation.] A short time; an instant; a stroke.

If they get never so great spoil at any time, the same they waste in a trice, as naturally delighting

in spoil, though it do themselves no good. Spenser.

Just in the nick the cook knock'd thrice,

And all the waiters in a trice

His summons did obey:

Each serving man with dith in hand

March'd boldly up like our train'd band,

Presented, and away. Suckling.

He could raise scruples dark and nice,

And after solve them in a trice. Hudibras.

So when the war had rais'd a storm,

I've seen a snake in human form,

All stain'd with infamy and vice,

Leap from the dunghill in a trice. Swift.

It seems incredible at first, that all the blood in our bodies should circulate in a trice, in a very few minutes; but it would be more surprising if we knew the short periods of the great circulation of water. Bentley.

A man shall make his fortune in a trice,

If bless'd with pliant, though but slender sense,

Feign'd modesty, and real impudence. Young.

TRICHO'TOMY. n. f. [τρίχολομία.] Division into three parts.

Some disturb the order of nature by dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves: let the subject, with the design you have in view, determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

TRICK. n. f. [treck, Dutch.]

1. A fly fraud.

Sir Thomas More said, that a trick of law had no less power than the wheel of fortune, to lift men up, or cast them down. Raleigh.

A bantering droll took a journey to Delphos, to try if he could put a trick upon Apollo. L'Estrange.

Such a one thinks to find some shelter in my friendship, and I betray him: he comes to me for counsel, and I shew him a trick. South.

He swore by Styx,
 Whate'er she would desire, to grant;
 But wise Ardelia knew his tricks. Swift.

2. A dexterous artifice.

Gather the lowest, and leaving the top,
 Shall teach thee a trick for to double thy crop. Tusser.

And now, as oft in some distemper'd state,
 On one nice trick depends the gen'ral fate. Pope.

3. A vitious practice.

Suspicion shall be stuck full of eyes:
 For treason is but trusted like a fox,
 Who ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
 Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shakspeare.

I entertain you with somewhat more worthy than the stale exploded trick of fulsome panegyrics. Dryden.

Some friends to vice pretend,
 That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden.

4. A juggle; an antick; any thing done to cheat jocosely, or to divert.

A rev'rend prelate stopp'd his coach and fix,
 To laugh a little at our Andrew's tricks. Prior.

5. An unexpected effect.

So fellest foes who broke their sleep,
 To take the one the other, by some chance,
 Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakspeare.

6. A practice; a manner; a habit. Not in use.

I spoke it but according to the trick: if you'll hang me, you may. Shakspeare.

The trick of that voice I well remember. Shakspeare.

Behold,
 Although the print be little, the whole matter

And copy of the father; eye, nose, lip,
 The trick of 's frown, his forehead. Shakspeare.

7. A number of cards laid regularly up in play: as, a trick of cards.

To TRICK. v. a. [from the noun; tricker, French.]

1. To cheat; to impose on; to defraud.

It is impossible that the whole world should thus conspire to cheat themselves, to put a delusion on mankind, and trick themselves into belief. Stephens.

2. To dress; to decorate; to adorn; properly, to knot. [Trica, in low Latin, signifies a knot of hair; treccia, Italian:

hence trace. Matt. Westmonasteriensis says of Godiva of Coventry, that she rode tricas capitis & crines dissolvens.]

And trick them up in knotted curls anew. Drayton.

They turned the imposture upon the king, and gave out, that to defeat the true inheritor he had tricked up a boy in the likeness of Edward Planta-genet. Bacon.

Horridly trickt

With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons,

Bak'd and impacted with the parching fires. Shakspeare.

This pillar is but a med'ey, or a mass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind of stealth;

and though the most richly tricked, yet the poorest

in this, that he is a borrower of all his beauty. Wotton.

Their heads are trickt with tassels and flowers. Sandys.

Woeful shepherds, weep no more,
 For Lyeidas, your sorrow, is not dead:
 Sunk though he be beneath the wat'ry floor,
 So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
 And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
 And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore
 Flames in the forehead of the morning sky. Milton.

Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont
 With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

A daw that had a mind to be sparkish, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster. L'Estrange.

Love is an airy good opinion makes,
 That tricks and dresses up the gaudy dream. Dryden.

People lavish it profusely in tricking up their children in fine cloaths, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

3. To perform with a light touch; though it may here mean to dress.

Come, the colours and the ground prepare:
 Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air;

Chuse a firm cloud before it fall, and in it
 Catch ere she change the Cynthia of this minute. Pope.

To TRICK. v. n. To live by fraud.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never thriving,

And murd'ring plays, which still they call reviving. Dryden.

TRICKER. n. f. [This is often written trigger; I know not which is right.]

The catch which being pulled disengages the cock of the gun, that it may give fire.

Pulling aside the tricker we observed, that the force of the spring of the lock was not sensibly abated by the absence of the air. Boyle.

As a goose

In death contracts his talons close;

So did the knight, and with one claw

The tricker of his pistol draw. Hudibras.

TRICKING. n. f. [from trick.] Dress; ornament.

Get us properties and tricking for our fairies. Shakspeare.

TRICKISH. adj. [from trick.] Knavishly artful; fraudulently cunning; mischievously subtle.

All he says is in a loose, slippery, and trickish way of reasoning. Pope.

To TRICKLE. v. n. [Of this word I find no etymology that seems well authorized or probable.] To fall in drops; to rill in a slender stream.

He, prick'd with pride,
 Forth spurred fast; adown his courser's side
 The red blood trickling, stain'd the way. Spenser.

Fall beside there trickled softly down

A gentle stream, whose murr'ring wave did play

Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound

To lull him fast asleep that by it lay. Spenser.

Some noises help sleep; as, the blowing of the wind, and trickling of water, as moving in the spirits a gentle attention, which stilleth the discus-sive motion. Bacon.

He wakened by the trickling of his blood. Wifeman.

Beneath his ear the fast'ned arrow flood,

And from the wound appear'd the trickling blood. Dryden.

He lay stretch'd along, his eyes fixt upward,

And ever and anon a silent tear

Stole down, and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.

The emblems of honour wrought on the front in the brittle materials above-mentioned, trickled away

under the first impressions of the heat. Addison.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands,

Tuning his voice and balancing his hands:

How fluent nonsense trickles from his tongue!

How sweet the periods, neither said nor sung! Pope.

They empty heads console with empty sound.

No more, alas! the voice of fame they hear,

The balm of dulness trickling in their ear. Pope.

TRI'CKSY. adj. [from trick.] Pretty. This is a word of endearment. Obsolete.

The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words; and I do know
A many fools that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, that for a tricksy word Defy the matter. Shakspeare.

All this service have I done since I went.
—My tricksy spirit! Shakspeare.

2. Happening every third day.

TRIENNIAL. adj. [triennis, Lat. triennal, French.]

1. Lasting three years.
I passed the bill for triennial parliaments.
King Charles.

Richard the third, though he came in by blood, yet the short time of his triennial reign he was without any, and proved one of my best lawgivers.
Howel.

2. Happening every third year.

TRI'ER. n. f. [from try.]

1. One who tries experimentally.

The ingenious triers of the German experiment found, that their glass vessel was lighter when the air had been drawn out than before, by an ounce and very near a third. Boyle.

2. One who examines judicially.

Courts of justice are bound to take notice of acts of parliament, and whether they are truly pleaded or not; and therefore they are the triers of them.
Hale.

There should be certain triers or examiners appointed by the state to inspect the genius of every particular boy. Spectator.

3. Test; one who brings to the test.

You were used
To say, extremity was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear.
Shakspeare.

To TRI'FALLOW. v. a. [tres, Latin, and realga, Sax. a harrow.] To plow land the third time before sowing. Bailey.

crany we have beheld. Brown.

To TRI'FLE. v. n. [tryfelen, Dutch.]

1. To act or talk without weight or dignity; to act with levity; to talk with folly.

When they saw that we ought to abrogate such popish ceremonies as are unprofitable, or else might have other more profitable in their stead, they trifle and they beat the air about nothing which toucheth us, unless they mean that we ought to abrogate all popish ceremonies. Hooker.

2. To mock; to play the fool.

Do not believe,
That, from the sense of all civility,
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence.
Shakspeare.

3. To indulge light amusement: as, he trifled all his time.

Whatever raises a levity of mind, a trifling spirit, renders the soul incapable of seeing, apprehending, and relishing the doctrines of piety. Law.

4. To be of no importance.

'Tis hard for every trifling debt of two shillings to be driven to law. Spenser.

To TRI'FLE. v. a. To make of no importance. Not in use.

Threescore and ten I can remember well,
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful and things strange; but this sore night
Hath trifled former knowings. Shakspeare.

TRI'FLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A thing of no moment.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deep consequence. Shakspeare.

Old Chaucer doth of Topas tell,
Mad Rabelais and Pantagruel,
A later third of Dowlabell,

With such poor trifles playing:
Others the like have labour'd at,
Some of this thing, and some of that,
And many of them know not what,
But that they must be saying. Drayton.

The infinitely greatest confessed good is neglected, to satisfy the successive uneasiness of our desires pursuing trifles. Locke.

Brunetta's wife in actions great and rare,
But scorns on trifles to bestow her care:
Thus ev'ry hour Brunetta is to blame,
Because the occasion is beneath her aim.
Think nought a trifle, though it small appear;
Small sands the mountain, moments make the year:
And trifles life. Your care to trifles give,
Or you may die before you truly live. Young.

TRI'FLER. n. f. [trifelaar, Dutch.] One who acts with levity; one that talks with folly.

A man cannot tell whether Apelles or Albert Durer were the more triflers, whereof the one would make a personage by geometrical proportions, the other by taking the best parts out of divers faces to make one excellent. Bacon.

Shall I, who can enchant the boist'rous deep,
Bid Boreas halt, make hills and forests move;
Shall I be baffled by this trifler, love? Granville.

As much as systematical learning is decry'd by some vain triflers of the age, it is the happiest way to furnish the mind with knowledge. Watts.

Triflers not ev'n in trifles can excel;
'Tis solid bodies only polish well. Young.

TRI'FLING. adj. [from trifle.] Wanting worth; unimportant; wanting weight.

To a soul supported with an assurance of the divine favour, the honours or afflictions of this life will be equally trifling and contemptible. Rogers.

TRI'FLINGLY. adv. [from trifling.] Without weight; without dignity; without importance.

Those who are carried away with the spontaneous current of their own thoughts, must never humour their minds in being thus triflingly busy.
Locke.

TRIFOLIATE. adj. [tres and folium, Lat.]
Having three leaves.

Trifoliate cythus restrain'd its boughs
For humble sheep to crop, and goats to brouze.
Harte.

TRI'FORM. adj. [triformis, Latin.] Having a triple shape.

The moon her monthly round
Still ending, still renewing through mid heav'n,
With borrow'd light her countenance triform
Hence fills, and empties, to enlighten th' earth.
Milton.

TRI'GGER. n. f. [derived by Junius from trigue, French; from intricare, Latin.] See TRICKER.

1. A catch to hold the wheel on steep ground.
2. The catch that being pulled looses the cock of the gun.

The pulling the trigger of the gun with which the murder is committed, has no natural connection with those ideas that make up the complex one, murder. Locke.

TRIGINTALS. n. f. [from triginta, Latin, thirty.]

Trentals or trigintals were a number of masses to the tale of thirty, instituted by St. Gregory.
Ayliffe.

TRI'GLYPH. n. f. [In architecture.] A member of the frieze of the Dorick order, set directly over every pillar, and in certain spaces in the intercolumniations.
Harris.

The Dorick order has now and then a sober garnishment of lions' heads in the cornice, and of tryglyphs and metopes always in the frieze. Wotton.

TRI'GON. n. f. [τρίγωνον.] A triangle. A term in astrology.

The ordinary height of a man ninety-six digits, the ancient Egyptians estimated to be equal to that mystical cubit among them stiled passus Ibis, or the trigon that the Ibis makes at every step, consisting of three latera, each thirty-two digits. Hale.

TRI'GONAL. adj. [from trigon.] Triangular; having three corners.

A spar of a yellow hue shot into numerous trigonal pointed shoots of various sizes, found growing to one side of a perpendicular fissure of a strature of freestone. Woodward.

TRIGONO'METRY. n. f. [τρίγωνος and μέτρον.] The art of measuring triangles, or of calculating the sides of any triangle sought, and this is plain or spherical.

metry*.] Pertaining to trigonometry.

TRILA'TERAL. adj. [trilateral, Fr. tres and latus, Lat.] Having three sides.

TRILL. n. f. [trillo, Italian.] Quaver; tremulousness of musick.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.

To TRILL. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter quavering.

Through the soft silence of the listening night,
The sober-suited songstress trills her lay. Thomson.

To TRILL. v. n.

1. To trickle; to fall in drops or slender streams.

Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?—

Aye; she took 'em; read 'em in my presence;
And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheek. Shakspeare.

2. To play in tremulous vibrations of sound.

Am I call'd upon the grave debate,
To judge of trilling notes and tripping feet?
Dryden.

TRI'LLION. n. f. [A word invented by Locke.] A million of millions of millions; a million twice multiplied by a million.

TRILU'MINAR. } adj. [triluminaris, TRILU'MINOUS. } Latin.] Having

TRIM. adj. [γετρημμεδ, Sax. completed.]

Nice; smug; dressed up. It is used with slight contempt.

T' one paine in cottage doth take,
When t' other trim bowers do make. Tuffer.

A trim exploit, a manly enterprize,
To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes
With your derision. Shakspeare.

The Dorick order has, in comparison of those that follow, a more masculine aspect, and little trimmer than the Tuscan that went before, save a sober garnishment now and then of lions' heads in the cornice, and of tryglyphs and metopes always in the frieze. Wotton

Dost thou not blush to live so like a beast,
So trim, so dissolute, so loosely drest? Dryden.

To TRIM. v. a. [trimman, Sax. to build.]

1. To fit out.

Malicious censurers ever,
As ravenous fishes do a vessel follow
That is new trimm'd. Shakspeare.

2. To dress; to decorate.

Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimm'd in Julia's gown. Shakspeare.

Pennyroyal and orpin they use in the country to trim their houses, binding it with a lath against a wall. Bacon.

Two arts attend architecture, like her principal gentlewomen, to dress and trim her, picture and sculpture. Wotton.

The victim beast that was for altars prest,
Trimm'd with white ribbons and with garlands drest,
Sunk of himself. Dryden.

3. To shave; to clip.

Mephiboseth had neither dressed his feet, nor trimmed his beard. 2 Samuel.

Clip and trim those tender strings like a beard. Brown.

The barber may trim religion as he pleases. Howel.

Trim off the small superfluous branches. Mort.

4. To make neat; to adjust.

I found her trimming up the diadem
On her dead mistress. Shakspeare.

Go, firrah, to my cell; as you look
To have my pardon, trim it handsomely. Shakspeare.

Yet are the men more loose than they!

More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rubb'd, and trimm'd,

More sleek, more soft, and slacker limb'd. Ben J.

To blast the living gave the dead their due,

And wreaths herself had tainted, trimm'd anew. Tickel.

When workmen fit a piece into other work, they say they trim in a piece. Moxon.

Each muse in Leo's golden days
Starts from her trance, and trims her wither'd bays. Pope.

O'er globes, and sceptres, now, on thrones it swells,

Now, trims the midnight lamp in college cells. Young.

5. To balance a vessel.

Sir Roger put his coachman to trim the boat. Spektor.

6. It has often up emphatical.

He gave you all the duties of a man,
Trimm'd up your praises with a princely tongue,
Spoke your deservings like a chronicle. Shakspeare.

To TRIM. v. n. To balance; to fluctuate between two parties.

If such by trimming and time-serving, which are but two words for the same thing, betray the church by nauseating her pious orders, this will produce confusion. South.

For men to pretend that their will obeys that law, while all besides their will serves the faction; what is this but a gross, sulsome juggling with their duty, and a kind of trimming it between God and the devil? South.

He who would hear what ev'ry fool cou'd say,
Wou'd never fix his thought, but trim his time away. Dryden.

TRIM. n. s. Dress; geer; ornaments.

It is now a word of slight contempt.

They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And to the fire-eyed maid of smoaky war,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them. Shakspeare.

Forget

Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein You made great Juno angry. Shakspeare.

The goodly London in her gallant trim,
The Phoenix daughter of the vanquish'd old,
Like a rich bride does to the ocean swim,
And on her shadow rides in floating gold. Dryden.

TRIMLY. adv. [from trim.] Nicely; neatly.

Her yellow golden hair
Was trimly woven, and in tresses wrought. Spenser.

The mother, if of the household of our lady, will have her son cunning and bold, in making him to live trimly. Ascham.

TRIMMER. n. s. [from trim.]

1. One who changes sides to balance parties; a turncoat.

The same bat taken after by a weazel begged for mercy: No, says the weazel, no mercy to a mouse: Well, says t'other, but you may see by my wings that I am a bird; and so the bat 'scap'd in both by playing the trimmer. L'Estrange.

To confound his hated coin,
All parties and religions join,
Whigs, tories, trimmers. Swift.

2. A piece of wood inserted.

Before they pin up the frame of ground-plates, they must fit in the summer and the girders, and all the joists and the trimmers for the stair-case. Moxon.

TRIMMING. n. s. [from trim.] Ornamental appendages to a coat or gown.

Judgment without vivacity of imagination is too heavy, and like a dress without fancy; and the last without the first is too gay, and but all trimming. Garth.

TRIMNESS. n. s. [from trim.] Neatness, petty elegance of dress.

TRINAL. adj. [trinus, Lat.] Threefold.

Like many an angel's voice,
Singing before th' eternal majesty,
In their trinal triplicity on high. Spenser.

That far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he wont at heav'n's high council table
To fit the midst of trinal unity,
He laid aside. Milton.

TRINE. n. s. [trine, Fr. trinus, Lat.] An aspect of planets placed in three angles of a trigon, in which they are supposed by astrologers to be eminently benign.

To th' other five,
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milton.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
And high-raisd Jove from his dark prison freed,
Those weights took off that on his planet hung,
Will gloriously the new-laid works succeed. Dryden.

From Aries right-ways draw a line, to end
In the same round, and let that line subtend
An equal triangle; now since the lines
Must three times touch the round, and meet three signs, Where'er they meet in angles those are trines. Creech.

To TRINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a trine aspect.

This advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be outridden, though outrun;
By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd. Dryden.

TRINITY. n. s. [trinitas, Lat. trinité, Fr.] The incomprehensible union of the Three Persons in the Godhead.

Touching the picture of the trinity, I hold it blasphemous and utterly unlawful. Peacbam.

In my whole essay there is not any thing like an objection against the trinity. Locke.

TRINKET. n. s. [This Skinner derives somewhat harshly from trinquet, Fr. trinchetto, Ital. a top-sail. I rather imagine it corrupted from tricket, some petty finery or decoration.]

1. Toys; ornaments of dress; superfluities of decoration.

Beauty and use can so well agree together, that of all the trinkets wherewith they are attired, there is not one but serves to some necessary purpose. Sidney.

They throng who should buy first, as if my trinkets had been hallowed. Shakspeare.

Let her but have three wrinkles in her face,
Soon will you hear the sawcy steward say,
Pack up with all your trinkets, and away. Dryden.

She was not hung about with toys and trinkets, tweezer-cases, pocket-glasses. Arbutnot.

How Johnny wheedled, threaten'd, fawn'd,
Till Phyllis all her trinkets pawn'd. Swift.

2. Things of no great value; tackle; tools.

What husbandlie husbands, except they be foolies,
But handsom have storehouse for trinkets and tools? Tuffer.

Go with all your servants and trinkets about you. L'Estrange.

TRIOBOLAR. adj. [triobolaris, Lat.] Vile; mean; worthless.

Turn your libel into verse, and then it may pass current amongst the balladmongers for a triobolar ballad. Cheyne.

To TRIP. v. a. [treper, French; trippen, Dutch.]

1. To supplant; to throw by striking the feet from the ground by a sudden motion.

He conjunct Tripp'd me behind. Shakspeare.

To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person. Shakspeare.

2. To strike from under the body.

I trip up thy heels and beat thee. Shakspeare.

The words of Hobbes's defence trip up the heels of his cause; I had once resolved. To resolve presupposeth deliberation, but what deliberation can there be of that which is inevitably determined by causes without ourselves? Bramhall.

3. To catch; to detect.

These women
Can trip me, if I err; who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when the finish'd. Shakspeare.

To TRIP. v. n.

1. To fall by losing the hold of the feet.

2. To fail; to err; to be deficient.

Saint Jerome, who pardons not over-easily his adversaries, if any where they chance to trip, prefeth him as thereby making all sorts of men God's enemies. Hooker.

Virgil is so exact in every word, that none can be changed but for a worse: he pretends sometimes to trip, but it is to make you think him in danger when most secure. Dryden.

Many having used their utmost diligence to secure a retention of the things committed to the memory, cannot certainly know where it will trip and fail them. South.

Will shines in mixed company, making his real ignorance appear a seeming one: our club has caught him tripping, at which times they never spare him. Spektor.

Several writers of uncommon erudition would expose my ignorance, if they caught me tripping in a matter of so great moment. Spektor.

3. To stumble; to titubate.

I may have the idea of a man's drinking till his tongue trips, yet not know that it is called drunkenness. Locke.

4. To run lightly.

In silence sad,
Trip we after the night's shade. Shakspeare.

The old saying is, the third pays for all; the triplex, fir, is a good tripping measure. Shakspeare.

He throws his arm, and with a long-drawn dath Blends all together; then distinctly trips
From this to that; then quick returning skips
And snatches this again, and pauses there. Crayford.

TRI

On old Lycæus, or Cyllene hoar,
Trip no more in twilight ranks;
Through Erymanth your loss deplore,
A better foil shall give ye thanks. Milton.
She bounded by, and tripp'd so light
They had not time to take a steady fight. Dryden.
Stay, nymph, he cried, I follow not a foe;
Thus from the lion trips the trembling doe. Dryden.

Well thou dost to hide from common fight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light:
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame
Tripping from sea on such an errand came. Dryden.
He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot. Addison.

The lower plaits of the drapery in antique figures in sculpture and painting, seem to have gathered the wind when the person is in a posture of tripping forward. Addison.

In Britain's isles, as Heylin notes,
The ladies trip in petticoats. Prior.
They gave me instructions how to slide down,
and trip up the steepest slopes. Pope.

5. To take a short voyage.

TRIP n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke or catch by which the wrestler supplants his antagonist.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Shakspeare.

He stript for wrestling, smears his limbs with oil,
And watches with a trip his foe to foil. Dryden.

It was a noble time when trips and Cornish hugs could make a man immortal. Addison.

2. A stumble by which the foothold is lost.

3. A failure; a mistake.

He saw his way, but in so swift a pace,
To chuse the ground might be to lose the race:
They then, who of each trip th' advantage take,
Find but those faults which they want wit to make. Dryden.

Each seeming trip, and each digressive start,
Displays their case the more, and deep-plann'd art. Harte.

4. A short voyage or journey.

I took a trip to London on the death of the queen. Pope.

TRI'PARTITE, adj. [tripartite, Fr. tripar-

TRIPLE. adj. [triple, Fr. triplex, triplus,
Latin.]

1. Threefold; consisting of three con- joined.

See in him

The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a trumpet's stool. Shakspeare.

O night and shades,
How are ye join'd with hell in triple knot,
Against th' unarmed weakness of one virgin,
Alone and helpless! Milton.

TRI

Thrice happy pair! so near ally'd
In royal blood and virtue too:
Now love has you together ty'd,
May none this triple knot undo! Waller.
By thy triple shape as thou art seen
In heav'n, earth, hell, grant this. Dryden.
Strong Alcides, after he had slain
The triple Geryon, drove from conquer'd Spain
His captive herds. Dryden.

Outbounc'd the mastiff of the triple head;
Away the hare with double swiftness fled. Swift.

2. Treble; three times repeated.

We have taken this as a moderate measure betwixt the highest and lowest; but if we had taken only a triple proportion, it would have been sufficient. Burnet.

If then the atheist can have no imagination of more senses than five, why doth he suppose that a body is capable of more? If we had double or triple as many, there might be the same suspicion for a greater number without end. Bentley.

To TRI'PLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To treble; to make thrice as much, or as many.

To what purpose should words serve, when nature hath more to declare than groans and strong cries; more than streams of bloody sweat; more than his doubled and tripled prayers can express? Hooker.

If these halfpence should gain admittance, in no long space of time his limited quantity would be tripled upon us. Swift.

2. To make threefold.

Time, action, place, are so preserv'd by thee,
That e'en Cornelle might with envy see
Th' alliance of his tripled unity. Dryden.

TRI'PLET. n. f. [from triple.]

1. Three of a kind.

There sit C—nts, D—ks, and Harrison,
How they swagger from their garrison;
Such a triplet could you tell
Where to find on this side hell? Swift.

2. Three verses rhyming together: as,

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march and energy divine. Pope.
Some wretched lines from this neglected hand
May find my hero on the foreign strand, Warm with new fires, and pleas'd with new command. Prior.

I frequently make use of triplet rhymes, because they bound the sense, making the last verse of the triplet a pindarick. Dryden.

TRI'PLICATE. adj. [from triplex, Lat.]

Made thrice as much.

TriPLICATE ratio, in geometry, is the ratio of cubes to each other; which ought to be distinguished from triple. Harris.

All the parts, in height, length, and breadth, bear a duplicate or triPLICATE proportion one to another. Grew.

TRIPLICATION. n. f. [from triPLICATE.]

The act of trebling, or adding three together.

Since the margin of the visible horizon in the heavenly globe is parallel with that in the earthly, accounted but one hundred and twenty miles diameter; sense must needs measure the azimuths, or vertical circles, by triPLICATION of the same diameter of one hundred and twenty. Glanville.

TRIPLI'CITY. n. f. [triplicité, Fr. from triplex, Latin.] Trebleness; state of being threefold.

It was a dangerous triplicity to a monarchy, to have the arms of a foreigner, the discontents of subjects, and the title of a pretender to meet. Bacon.

Affect not duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things. Watts.

TRI'PMADAM. n. f. An herb.

TriPMadam is used in salads. Mortimer.

In polishing glass with putty, or tripoly, it is not to be imagined that those substances can by grating and fretting the glass bring all its least particles to an accurate polish. Newton.

TRI'POS. n. f. A tripod. See TRIPOD.

Welcome all that lead or follow,

To the oracle of Apollo;

Here he speaks out of his pottle,

Or the tripas, his tower bottle. Ben Jonson.

Craz'd fool, who would be thought an oracle,

Come down from off the tripas, and speak plain. Dryden.

TRI'PPER. n. f. [from trip.] One who trips.

TRI'PPING. adj. [from trip.] Quick;
nimble.

The clear sun of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake, to tripping ebb; that stole
With soft foot tow'rs the deep. Milton.

TRI'PPING. n. f. [from trip.] Light dance.

Back, shepherds, back, enough your play,

Here be without duck or nod,

Other trippings to be trod,

Of lighter toes. Milton.

TRI'PPINGLY. adv. [from tripping.]

With agility; with swift motion.

This dirty after me

Sing, and dance it trippingly. Shakspeare.

Speak the speech trippingly on the tongue; but if you mouth it as many of our players do, I had as lieve the town-crier had spoke my lines. Shakspeare.

TRI'PTOTE. n. f. [triptoton, Latin.] A noun used but in three cases. Clarke.

TRIPU'DIARY. adj. [tripudium, Latin.]

For men of sense despise a trivial choice.

Rescommon.

2. Light; trifling; unimportant; inconsiderable. This use is more frequent, though less just.

This argues conscience in your grace,
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial,
All circumstances well considered.

Shakspeare.

This way of measuring felicities was so natural to him, that it would occur even in the most trivial instances.

Fell.

See you mad fools, who, for some trivial right,
For love, or for mistaken honour, fight.

Dryden.

Were they only some slight and trivial indiscretions, to which the example of the world exposed us, it might perhaps not much concern our religion.

Rogers.

In every work regard the writer's end;
And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due.

Pope.

The ancient poets are like many modern ladies;
let an action be never so trivial in itself, they always make it appear of the utmost importance.

Pope.

TRI'VIALLY. adv. [from trivial.]

1. Commonly; vulgarly.

Money is not the sinews of war, as is trivially said, where the sinews of men's arms, in effeminate people, fail.

Bacon.

2. Light; inconsiderably.

TRI'VIALNESS. n. f. [from trivial.]

1. Commonness; vulgarity.

2. Lightness; unimportance.

TRIUMPH. n. f. [triumphus, Lat. trionphe, Fr.]

1. Pomp with which a victory is publicly celebrated.

Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave;
And there cut off thy most ungracious head,
Which I will bear in triumph to the king.

Shakspeare.

In ancient times the triumphs of the generals from victory, and the great donatives upon disbanding the armies, were things able to enflame all men's courage.

Bacon.

2. State of being victorious.

Sublime with expectation when to see
In triumph issuing forth their glorious chief.

Milton.

Hercules from Spain,
Arriv'd in triumph, from Geryon slain.

Dryden.

TRI

3. Victory; conquest.

Eros has

Packt cards with Cæsar, and false play'd my glory
Unto an enemy's triumph.

Shakspeare.

Each order bright

Sung triumph, and him sung victorious king.

Milt.

It fools admire, or whining coxcombs toast,
The vain coquets the trifling triumphs boast.

Logie.

4. Joy for success.

Great triumph and rejoicing was in heaven.

Milton.

5. A conquering card, now called trump.
See TRUMP.

To TRIUMPH. v. n. [triumpho, Latin; triumpher, French.] This word is always accented in prose on the first syllable, but in poetry sometimes on the last.]

1. To celebrate a victory with pomp; to rejoice for victory.

The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment.

Job.

Your victory, alas! begets my fears;

Can you not then triumph without my tears?

Dryden.

2. To obtain victory.

This great commander fought many times to persuade Solyman to forbear to use his forces any farther against the christians, over whom he had sufficiently triumphed, and turn them upon the Persians.

Knolles.

Then all this earthly grossness quit,
Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death, and chance, and time.

Milton.

There fix thy faith, and triumph o'er the world;
For who can help, or who can save besides?

Rowe.

While blooming youth and gay delight

Sit on thy rosy cheeks confest,

Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right

To triumph o'er this destin'd breast.

Prior.

3. To insult upon an advantage gained.

How ill becoming is it in thy sex
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull!

Shakspeare.

Sorrow on all the pack of you,

That triumph thus upon my misery!

Shakspeare.

Our grand foe,

Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heaven.

Milton.

TRIUMPHAL. adj. [triumphal, French; triumphalis, Latin; from triumph.] Used in celebrating victory.

He left only triumphal garments to the general.

Bacon.

Ye so near heav'n's door,

Triumphal with triumphal act have met.

Milton.

Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And hew triumphal arches to the ground.

Pope.

Left we should for honour take

The drunken quarrel of a rake;

Or think it seated in a scar,

Or on a proud triumphal car.

Swift.

TRIUMPHAL. n. f. [triumphalia, Latin; triumphal ornaments.] A token of victory. Not in use.

He to his crew, that sat consulting, brought Joyless triumphs of his hop'd success.

Milton.

TRIUMPHANT. adj. [triumphans, Latin; triumphant, French.]

1. Celebrating a victory.

Captives bound to a triumphant car.

Shakspeare.

It was drawn as a triumphant chariot, which at the same time both follows and triumphs.

South.

2. Rejoicing as for victory.

Think you but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am?

Shakspeare.

Off with the traitor's head;

And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned.

Shakspeare.

Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth
Triumphant out of his infernal pit.

Milton.

3. Victorious; graced with conquest.

As in the militant church men are excommunicate, not so much for their offence, as for their obstinacy; so shall it be in the church triumphant: the kingdom of heaven shall be barred against men, not so much for their sin committed, as for their lying therein without repentance.

Perkins.

He speedily through all the hierarchies
Intends to pass triumphant, and give laws.

Milton.

Athena, war's triumphant maid,
The happy son will, as the father, aid.

Pope.

TRIUMPHANTLY. adv. [from triumphant.]

1. In a triumphant manner in token of victory; joyfully as for victory.

Victory, with little loss doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;

Who are at hand triumphantly display'd.

Shakspeare.

Herself in person went to seek the sacred cross Whereon our Saviour died; which found, as it was sought,

From Salem unto Rome triumphantly she brought.

Drayton.

Through armed ranks triumphantly she drives,
And with one glance commands ten thousand lives.

Granville.

2. Victoriously; with success.

Thou must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our street; or else

Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm.

Shakspeare.

3. With insolent exultation.

A mighty governing lye goes round the world, and has almost banished truth out of it; and so reigning triumphantly in its stead, is the source of most of those confusions that plague the universe.

South.

TRIUMPHER. n. f. [from triumph.] One who triumphs.

These words become your lips, as they pass through them,
And enter in our ears, like great triumphers

In their applauding gates.

Shakspeare.

August was dedicated to Augustus by the senate, because in the same month he was the first time created consul, and thrice triumpher in Rome.

Peacocks.

TRIUMVIRATE. } n. f. [triumviratus, or TRIUMVIRI. } triumviri, Latin.]

A coalition or concurrence of three men.

Lepidus of the triumvirate

Should be depos'd.

Shakspeare.

The triumviri, the three corner cap of society.

Shakspeare.

During that triumvirate of kings, Henry the eighth of England, Francis the first of France, and Charles the fifth emperor of Germany, none of the three could win a palm of ground but the other two would balance it.

Bacon.

With these the Piercies them confederate,
And, as three heads, conjoin in one intent,

And, instituting a triumvirate,

Do part the land in triple government.

Daniel.

From distant regions fortune sends

An odd triumvirate of friends.

Swift.

TRI'UNE. adj. [tres and unus, Latin.]

At once three and one.

We read in scripture of a triune deity, of God made flesh in the womb of a virgin, and crucified by the Jews.

Burnet.

To TROAT. v. a. [with hunters.] To cry as a buck does at rutting time.

Di.

TRO'CAR. n. f. [trocar, corrupted from trois quart, French.] A surgical instrument.

The handle of the trocar is of wood, the canula of silver, and the perforator of steel.

Sharp.

TROCHA'ICAL. adj. [trochaïque, French; trochaicus, Latin.] Consisting of trochees.

TROCHA'INTERS. n. f. [τροχαντες.] Two processes of the thigh bone, called rotator major and minor, in which the tendons of many muscles terminate.

Di.

TRO'CHEE. n. f. [trocheus, Latin; trochee, French; τροχαιος.] A foot used in Latin poetry, consisting of a long and short syllable.

TROCHI'CKS. n. f. [τροχίλιον, τροχός, a wheel.] The science of rotatory motion.

There succeeded new inventions and horologies, composed by trochilicks, or the artifice of wheels, whereof some are kept in motion by weight, others without.

It is requisite that we rightly understand some principles in trochilicks, or the art of wheel instruments; as chiefly, the relation betwixt the parts of a wheel and those of a balance, the several proportions in the femidiameter of a wheel being answerable to the sides of a balance.

TRO'CHINGS. n. f. The branches on a deer's head.

TROCHI'SCH. n. f. [τροχίσκος; trochisque, French; trochiscus, Latin.] A kind of tablet or lozenge.

The trochisks of vipers, so much magnified, and the flesh of snakes some ways condited and corrected.

TROD. } The part. pass. of tread.
TRO'DDEN. }
Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the gentiles.

Thou, infernal serpent, shalt not long
Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
Or lightning, thou shalt fall from heav'n trod down
Under his feet.
Ev'n the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume.

TRODE. The preterit of tread.
They trode the grapes, and made merry.

TRODE. n. f. [from trode, pret. of tread.] Footing.
The trode is not so tickle.
They never set foot on that same trode,
But baulke their right way, and strain abroad.

TRO'GLODYTE. n. f. [τρογλοδυτης.] One who inhabits caves of the earth.
Procure me a troglodyte footman, who can catch a roe at his full speed.

To TROLL. v. a. [trollen, to roll, Dutch; perhaps from trochlea, Latin; a thing to turn round.] To move circularly; to drive about.

With the phant'ies of hey troll,
Troll about the bridal bowl,
And divide the broad-bread cake,
Round about the bride's stake.

To TROLL. v. n.
1. To roll; to run round.

How pleasant, on the banks of Styx,
To troll it in a coach and fix!

2. To fish for a pike with a rod which has a pulley toward the bottom, which I suppose gives occasion to the term.
Nor drain I ponds the golden carp to take,
Nor trouble for pikes, dispeoplers of the lake.

TRO'LLOP. n. f. [A low word, I know not whence derived.] A flatteringly loose woman.

TRO'LMYDAMES. n. f. [Of this word I know not the meaning.]
A fellow I have known to go about with trolmydames: I knew him once a servant of the prince.

TRO'NAGE. n. f. Money paid for weighing.

TROOP. n. f. [troupe, Fr. troppa, Italian; troope, Dutch; trop, Swedish; troppa, low Latin.]

1. A company; a number of people collected together.
That which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have.

VOL. II.

Saw you not a blessed troop.
Invite me to a banquet, whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun?

As the mind, by putting together the repeated ideas of unity, makes the collective mode of any number, as a score, or a gross; so by putting together several particular substances, it makes collective ideas of substances, as a troop, an army.

2. A body of soldiers.
Æneas seeks his absent foe,
And sends his slaughter'd troops to shades below.

3. A small body of cavalry.
To TROOP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To march in a body.
I do not, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in the throngs of military men,
But rather shew a while like fearful war.

They anon
With hundreds, and with thousands, trooping came, Attended!

Armies at the call of trumpet
Troop to their standard.

2. To march in haste.
Yonder shines Aurora's harbinger,
At whose approach ghosts, wand'ring here and there,
Troop home to churchyards.
The dry streets flow'd with men,
That troop'd up to the king's capacious court.

3. To march in company.
I do invest you jointly with my power,
Preheminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty.

TRO'OPER. n. f. [from troop.] A horse soldier. A trooper fights only on horseback; a dragoon marches on horseback, but fights either as a horseman or footman.

Custom makes us think well of any thing: what can be more indecent than for any to wear boots but troopers and travellers? yet not many years since it was all the fashion.

TROPE. n. f. [τροπή; trope, Fr. tropus, Lat.] A change of a word from its original signification; as, the clouds foretel rain, for forebode.

For rhetoric he could not ope
His mouth, but out there flew a trope.
If this licence be included in a single word, it admits of tropes; if in a sentence, of figures.

TRO'PHIED. adj. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.

Some greedy minion, or imperious wife,
The trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade,
And haunt their slumbers in the pompous shade.

TRO'PHY. n. f. [tropæum, trophæum, Lat.] Something shown or treasured up in proof of victory.

What trophy then shall I most fit devise,
In which I may record the memory
Of my love's conquest, peerless beauty's prize
Adorn'd with honour, love, and chastity?

To have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city, he forbids;
Giving all trophy, signal, and ostent,
Quite from himself to God.

There lie thy bones,
Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb.
Twice will I not review the morning's rise,
Till I have torn that trophy from thy back,
And split thy heart for wearing it.

In ancient times, the trophies erected upon the place of the victory, the triumphs of the generals upon their return, the great donatives upon the disbanding of the armies, were things able to inflame all men's courage.

Around the posts hung helmets, darts, and spears,
And captive chariots, axes, shields, and bars,
And broken beaks of ships, the trophies of their wars.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies grace,
To shew posterity Elpenor was.
Set up each senseless wretch for nature's boast,
On whom praise shines, as trophies on a post.

TRO'PICAL. adj. [from trope.]

1. Rhetorically changed from the original meaning.

A strict and literal acceptance of a loose and tropical expression was a second ground.

The words are tropical or figurative, and import an hyperbole, which is a way of expressing things beyond what really and naturally they are in themselves.

The foundation of all parables is, some analogy or similitude between the tropical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing intended by it.

2. [from tropick.] Placed near the tropick; belonging to the tropick.
The pine apple is one of the tropical fruits.

TRO'PICK. n. f. [tropique, Fr. tropicus, Lat.] The line at which the sun turns back, of which the north has the tropick of Cancer, and the south the tropick of Capricorn.

Under the tropick is our language spoke,
And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke.

Since on ev'ry sea, on ev'ry coast,
Your men have been distress'd, your navy tost,
Seven times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd.

TROPOLOGICAL. adj. [tropologique, Fr. τρόπος and λόγος.] Varied by tropes; changed from the original import of the words.

TROPO'LOGY. n. f. [τρόπος and λόγος.] A rhetorical mode of speech including tropes, or a change of some word from the original meaning.

Not attaining the deuterology and second intention of words, they omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not persuaded beyond their literalities.

TRO'SSERS. n. f. [trousses, Fr.] Breeches; hose. See TROUSE.

You rode like a kern of Ireland; your French hose off, and in your strait trossers.

To TROT. v. n. [trotter, Fr. trotten, Dutch,]

1. To move with a high jolting pace.
Poor Tom, that hath made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting horse, over four-inch'd bridges, to curse his own shadow for a traitor.

Whom doth time trot withal?

—He trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized; if the interim be but a sevensnight, time's pace is so hard, that it seems the length of seven years.

Take a gentle trotting horse, and come up and see your old friends.

2. To walk fast; or, to travel on foot: in a ludicrous or contemptuous sense.

TROT. n. f. [trot, Fr. from the verb.]

1. The jolting high pace of a horse.
His honesty is not
So loose or easy, that a ruffling wind
Can blow away, or glitt'ring look it blind:
Who rides his sure and even trot,
While the world now rides by, now lags behind.

Here lieth one who did most truly prove,
That he could never die while he could move;
So hung his destiny, never to rot
While he might still jog on and keep his trot.

The virtuoso's saddle will amble when the world is upon the hardest trot.

2. An old woman, in contempt. I know not whence derived.

Give him gold enough, and marry him to an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head: why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal. Shakspeare.
How now, bold-face! cries an old trot; firrah, we eat our own hens, and what you eat you steal. L'Estrange.

TROTH. n. f. [trouth, old English; træð, Saxon.]

1. Belief; faith; fidelity.

Saint Withold met the night-mare,
Bid her light and her trot plight. Shakspeare.
Stephen affails the realm, obtains the crown,
Such tumults raising as torment them both:
Th' afflicted state, divided in their trot
And partial faith, most miserable grown, Endures the while. Daniel.

2. Truth; verity.

In trot, thou'rt able to instruct grey hairs,
And teach the wily African deceit. Addison.

TROTHLESS. adj. [from trot.] Faithless; treacherous.

Thrall to the faithless waves and *trot*less sky. Fairfax.

TROTHPLIGHT. adj. [trot and plight.] Betrothed; affianced.

This, your son in law,
Is *trot*plight to your daughter. Shakspeare.

TROTTER. n. f. [from trot.]

1. One that walks a jolting pace.
2. A sheep's foot.

To TROUBLE. v. n. [troubler, Fr.]

1. To disturb; to perplex.

An hour before the worshipp'd sun
Peer'd through the golden window of the east,
A troubled mind drew me to walk abroad. Shakspeare.

But think not here to trouble holy rest. Milton.
Never trouble yourself about those faults which age will cure. Locke.

2. To afflict; to grieve.

It would not trouble me to be slain for thee, but much it torments me to be slain by thee. Sidney.
They pertinaciously maintain, that afflictions are no real evils, and therefore a wise man ought not to be troubled at them. Tillotson.
Though it is in vain to be troubled for that which I cannot chuse, yet I cannot chuse but be afflicted. Tillotson.

3. To distress; to make uneasy.

He had credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, and troubled not himself for that of others. Clarendon.
Be not dismay'd nor troubled at these tidings. Milton.

He was sore troubled in mind, and much distressed. 1 Maccabees.

4. To busy; to engage overmuch.

Martha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things. Luke.

5. To give occasion of labour to. A word of civility or slight regard.

I will not trouble myself to prove that all terms are not definable, from that progress in infinity which will lead us into. Locke.

6. To tease; to vex.

The boy so troubles me;
'Tis past enduring. Shakspeare.

7. To disorder; to put into agitation or commotion.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled;
Muddy, till seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shakspeare.

An angel went down into the pool and troubled the water; whosoever first after the troubling stepped in was made whole. John.
God looking forth will trouble all his host. Milton.

Hear how the thear employs;
Their office is the troubled air to take. Davies.

Seas are troubled when they do revoke
Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South.

The best law in our days is that which continues our judges during their good behaviour, without leaving them to the mercy of such who might, by an undue influence, trouble and pervert the course of justice. Addison.

Thy force alone their fury can restrain,
And smooth the waves, or swell the troubled main. Dryden.

8. [In low language.] To sue for a debt.

TROUBLE. n. f. [trouble, Fr.]

1. Disturbance; perplexity.

They all his host derided, while they stood
A while in trouble. Milton.

2. Affliction; calamity.

Double, double, toil and trouble,
Fire burn, and cauldron bubble. Shakspeare.

3. Molestation; obstruction; inconvenience.

Take to thee from among the cherubim
Thy choice of flaming warriors, lest the fiend
Some new trouble raise. Milton.

4. Uneasiness; vexation.

I have dream'd
Of much offence and trouble, which my mind
Knew never till this irksome night. Milton.

TROUBLE-STATE. n. f. [trouble and state.]

Disturber of a community; publick makebate.

Those fair baits these trouble-states still use,
Pretence of common good, the king's ill course,
Must be cast forth. Daniel.

TROUBLER. n. f. [from trouble.] Disturber; confounder.

Unhappy falls that hard necessity,
Quoth he, the troubler of my happy peace,
And vowed foe of my felicity. Spenser.
Heav'n's hurl down their indignation
On thee, thou troubler of the poor world's peace! Shakspeare.

The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny;
as is seen in great conquerors and *troubler*s of the world, and more in arch-hereticks. Bacon.

He knowing well that nation must decline,
Whose chief support and sinews are of coin,
Our nation's solid virtue did oppose
To the rich *troubler*s of the world's repose. Waller.
The sword justly drawn by us can scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be pared, as to be under no apprehensions for the future. Atterbury.

TROUBLESOME. adj. [from trouble.]

1. Vexatious; uneasy; afflictive.

Heav'n knows
By what bye-paths and indirect crooked ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shakspeare.

He must be very wise that can forbear being troubled at things very troublesome. Tillotson.

2. Full of molestation.

Though our passage through this world be rough and troublesome, yet the trouble will be but short, and the rest and contentment at the end will be an ample recompence. Atterbury.

3. Burdensome; tiresome; wearisome.

My mother will never be troublesome to me. Pope.

4. Full of teasing business.

All this could not make us accuse her, though it made us almost pine away for spite, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney.

5. Slightly harassing.

They, eas'd the putting off
These troublesome disguises which we wear. Milton.

Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bed-fellow? Shakspeare.

6. Unseasonably engaging; improperly importuning.

She of late is lightened of her womb,
That her to see should be but troublesome. Spenser.

7. Importunate; teasing.

Two or three troublesome old nurses never let me have a quiet night's rest with knocking me up. Arbutnot.

TROUBLESOMELY. adv. [from troublesome.] Vexatiously; wearisomely; unseasonably; importunately.

Though men will not be so troublesomely critical as to correct others in the use of words; yet, where truth is concerned, it can be no fault to desire their explication. Locke.

TROUBLESOMENESS. n. f. [from troublesome.]

1. Vexatiousness; uneasiness.

The lord treasurer complained of the troublesome-ness of the place for that the exchequer was so empty:
the chancellor answered, Be of good cheer, for now you shall see the bottom of your business at the first. Bacon.

2. Importunity; unseasonableness.

TROUBLOUS. adj. [from trouble.] Tumultuous; confused; disordered; put into commotion. An elegant word, but disused.

He alone would fly
Upon the streaming rivers, sport to find;
And oft would dare tempt the *troublo*us wind. Spenser.

Soon as they this mock king did espy,
Their *troublo*us strife they stinted by and by. Spenser.

No other noise, nor people's *troublo*us cries,
As still are wont to annoy the walled town,
Might there be heard. Spenser.

As a tall ship tossed in *troublo*us seas
Whom raging winds threaten to make the prey
Of the rough rocks. Spenser.

Then, masters, look to see a *troublo*us world. Shakspeare.

Only one supply
In four years *troublo*us and expensive reign. Daniel.

TROUVER. n. f. [trouver, French.] In the common law, is an action which a man hath against one that having found any of his goods refuseth to deliver them upon demand. Cowell.

TROUGH. n. f. [trug, truh, Sax. troth, Dutch; trou, Danish; traug, Islandick;
truogo, Italian.] Any thing hollowed and open longitudinally on the upper side.

The bloody boar
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines, Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough

In your embowel'd bosoms. Shakspeare.

They had no ships but big troughs, which they call canoes. Alden.

Where there is a good quick fall of rain-water, lay a half trough of stone, of a good length, three foot deep, with one end upon the high ground, the other upon the low; cover the trough with brakes a good thickness, and cast sand upon the top of the brakes, the lower end of the trough will run like a spring of water. Bacon.

Some log, perhaps, upon the water swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,

And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

That also is accounted virgin quicksilver, which, having no need to pass the fire, is separated by water first in a sieve, and afterwards in a long trough. Brown.

The water dissolves the particles of salt mixed in the stone, and is conveyed by long troughs and canals from the mines to Hall, where it is received in vast cisterns, and boiled off. Addison.

To TROUL. v. n. [trollen, to roll, Dutch.]
See TROLL.

1. To move volubly.

Bred only, and completed, to the taste
Of lustful appetite; to sing, to dance,
To dress, and troul the tongue, and roll the eye. Milton.

TRO

2. To utter volubly.

Let us be jocund. Will you trout the catch
You taught me while-ere? Shakspeare.

TO TROUNCE. v. a. [derived by Skinner from trunc or tronson, Fr. a club.] To punish by an indictment or information.

More probable, and like to hold
Than hand, or seal, or breaking gold;
For which so many, that renounc'd
Their plighted contracts, have been trounc'd.

Hudibras.

If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first: I'll trounce you for offering to corrupt my honesty.

Dryden.

TROUSE. } n. f. [trouffe, Fr. truisse, Erse.]
TROUSERS. } Breeches; hose. See

TROSSERS.

The leather quilted jack serves under his shirt of mail, and to cover his trouse on horseback. Spenser.

The unsightliness and pain in the leg may be helped by wearing a laced stocking; a laced trouse will do as much for the thigh. Wifeman.

TROUT. n. f. [truhtr, Sax. trocta, truta, trutta, Lat.]

1. A delicate spotted fish, inhabiting brooks and quick streams.

The pond will keep trout and salmon in their seasonable plight, but not in their reddish grain.

Carew.

Worse than the anarchy at sea,
Where fishes on each other prey;
Where ev'ry trout can make as high rants
O'er his inferiours as our tyrants.

Swift.

2. A familiar phrase for an honest, or per- haps for a silly fellow.

Here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. Shakspeare.

TO TROW. v. n. [træodian, Saxon; træ,
Danish.]

1. To think; to imagine; to conceive. A word now disused, and rarely used even in ancient writers but in familiar language.

What handfomeness, trow you, can be observed in that speech, which is made one knows not to whom? Sidney.

Is there any reasonable man, trow you, but will judge it meet that our ceremonies of christian religion should be popish, than Turkish or heathenish?

Hooker.

To-morrow next

We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow. Shaks.

O rueful day! rueful indeed, I trow. Gay.

2. To believe.

Lend less than thou owest,
Learn more than thou trowest. Shakspeare.

TROW. interject. [for I trow, or trow you.]
An exclamation of inquiry.

Well, if you be not turn'd Turk, there is no more failing by the star.

—What means the fool, trow? Shakspeare.

TROWEL. n. f. [truelle, Fr. trulla, Lat.]

1. A trowel is a tool to take up the mortar with, and spread it on the bricks; with which also they cut the bricks to such lengths as they have occasion, and also stop the joints.

Moxon.

This was dext'rous at his trowel,
That was bred to kill a cow well. Swift.

2. It is used for any coarse instrument.

How shall I answer you?

—As wit and fortune will.

—Or as the destinies decree.

—Well said, that was laid on with a trowel.

Shakspeare.

The most accurate engravings or embossments seem such rude, bungling, deformed works, as if they had been done with a mattock, or a trowel.

Wilkins.

TROY-WEIGHT. } n. f. [from troies, Fr.]

TROY. } A kind of weight by which gold and bread are weighed, con-

TRU

fisting of these denominations: a pound = 12 ounces; ounce = 20 penny-weights; pennyweight = 24 grains.

The English physicians make use of troy-weight after the following manner:

Grains	Scruple	Drachm	Ounce	Pound.
20
60	3
480	24	8
5760	288	96	12

The Romans left their ounce in Britain, now our averdupois ounce, for our troy ounce we had elsewhere. Arbushnot.

TRU'ANT. n. f. [truand, old French;
treuwant, Dutch, a vagabond.] An idler; one who wanders idly about, neglecting his duty or employment. To play the truant is, in schools, to stay from school without leave.

For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakspeare.

Though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection;
Yet hath sir Protheus made fair advantage of his days. Shakspeare.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers and truants. More.

Our ships are laden with the Trojan store,
And you like truants come too late ashore. Dryden.

TRU'ANT. adj. Idle; wandering from business; lazy; loitering.

What keeps you from Wertemberg?

—A truant disposition, good my lord. Shakspeare.

He made a blushing cital of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning instantly. Shakspeare.

Where thou seest a single sheep remain
In shades aloof, or couch'd upon the plain,
Or late to lag behind with truant pace,
Revenge the crime. Dryden.

TO TRU'ANT. v. n. [truander, to beg about a country, French; truawanten, old German.] To idle at a distance from duty;
to loiter; to be lazy.

'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board. Shaksp.

TRU'ANTSHIP. n. f. [truauté, old French;
from truant; truandise in Chaucer is beggary.] Idleness; negligence; neglect of study or business.

The master should not chide with him if the child have done his diligence, and used no truant- ship. Ascham.

TRUBS. n. f. [tuber, Latin.] A sort of herb. Ainsworth.

TRU'TAIL. n. f. A short squat woman.
Ainsworth.

TRUCE. n. f. [truga, low Latin; tregua, Italian; truie, old French.]

1. A temporary peace; a cessation of hosti- lities.

Leagues and truces made between superstitious persons, and such as serve God aright. Hooker.

They pray in vain to have sin pardoned, which seek not also to prevent sin by prayer, even every particular sin, by prayer against all sin, except men can name some transgression wherewith we ought to have truce. Hooker.

All this utter'd

With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent,
Could not make truce with the unruly spleen
Of Tybalt, deaf to peace. Shakspeare.

This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers. Shakspeare.

Men shall be lovers of their own selves, without natural affection, truce breakers. 2 Timothy.

TRU

Left the truce with treason should be mixt,
'Tis my concern to have the tree betwixt. Dryden.
Shadwell till death true dulness would maintain;
And in his father's right, and realm's defence, Ne'er would have peace with wit, nor truce with sense. Dryden.

2. Cessation; intermission; short quiet.

There he may find

Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours. Millon.

Sicknesses, which in the latter years of his life gave him but short and seldom truce. Fell.

TRUCIDATION. n. f. [from trucido, Lat.]
The act of killing.

TO TRUCK. v. n. [troquer, French; truc- care, Italian; trocac, Spanish; deduced by Salmasius from τροχῶν, to get money.]
To traffick by exchange; to give one commodity for another.

TO TRUCK. v. a. To give in exchange;
to exchange.

The Indians truck gold for glassies. L'Estrange.

Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul,

Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.

I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods, like the wild Indians, with each other.

Swift.

TRUCK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Exchange; traffick by exchange.

It is no less requisite to maintain a truck in moral offices, than in the common business of commerce.

L'Estrange.

Love is covetous; I must have all of you: heart for heart is an equal truck. Dryden.

2. [τροχῶν.] Wooden wheels for carriage of cannon. Ainsworth.

TO TRU'CKLE. v. n. [This word is, I believe, derived from trucklebed, which is always under another bed.] To be in a state of subjection or inferiority; to yield; to creep.

Shall our nation be in bondage thus

Unto a land that truckles under us? Cleaveland.

For which so many a legal cuckold

Has been run down in courts, and truckled.

Hudibras.

Men may be stiff and obstinate upon a wrong ground, and ply and truckle too upon as false a foundation. L'Estrange.

Religion itself is forced to truckle to worldly polity. Norris.

His zeal was not to lash our crimes,

But discontent against the times:

For had we made him timely offers,

To raise his post or fill his coffers,

Perhaps he might have truckled down,

Like other brethren of his gown. Swift.

They were subdued and insulted by Alexander's captains, and continued under several revolutions a small truckling state, of no name till they fell under the Romans. Swift.

TRU'CKLEBED, or Trundlebed. n. f. [properly trocled; from troclea, Latin, or τροχῶν.] A bed that runs on wheels under a higher bed.

There's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and trucklebed. Shakspeare.

If he that is in battle slain

Be in the bed of honour lain;

He that is beaten may be said

To lie in honour's trucklebed. Hudibras.

TRU'CULENCE. n. f. [truculentia, Lat.]

1. Savageness of manners.

2. Terribleness of aspect.

TRU'CULENT. adj. [truculentus, Latin.]

1. Savage; barbarous.

A barbarous Scythia, where the savage and tru- culent inhabitants transfer themselves from place to place in waggons, as they can find pasture, and live upon milk, and flesh roasted in the sun at the pomels of their saddles. Ray.

2. Terrible of aspect.
3. Destructive; cruel.
Pestilential seminaries, according to their grossness or subtilty, cause more or less truculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they enecate in two hours. Harvey.
- To TRUDGE. v. n. [truggiolare, Italian.]
To travel laboriously; to jog on; to march heavily on.
No man is secure, but night-walking heralds,
That trudge between the king and mistress Shore. Shakspeare.
- No sooner was he fit to trudge,
But both made ready to dislodge. Hudibras.
Away they trudged together, and about midnight got to their journey's end. L'Estrange.
Once a poor rogue, 'tis true, I trod the street,
And trudg'd to Rome upon my naked feet:
Gold is the greatest god. Dryden.
He that will know the truth must leave the beaten track, which none but servile minds trudge continually in. Locke.
- TRUE. adj. [treopa, trupa, Saxon.]
1. Not false; not erroneous; agreeing with fact, or with the nature of things.
Of those he chose the falsest two,
And fittest for to forge true seeming lies. Spenser.
Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast born;
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou cam'st into the world with thy legs forward. Shakspeare.
 2. Not false; agreeing with our own thoughts.
Hesperian fables true,
If true, here only. Milton.
What you said had not been true,
If spoke by any else but you. Cowley.
 3. Pure from the crime of falsehood; veracious.
A true witness delivereth souls. Proverbs.
 4. Genuine; real; not counterfeit.
The darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. John.
Among unequals what society
Can sort? What harmony or true delight? Milton.
Unbind the charms that in slight fables lie,
And teach that truth is truest poetry. Cowley.
Religion, as it is the most valuable thing in the world, so it gives the truest value to them who promote the practice of it by their example and authority. Atterbury.
 5. Faithful; not perfidious; steady.
My revenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it! come and be true. Shakspeare.
So young, and so untender?
—So young, my lord, and true.
—Let it be so; thy truth then be thy dower. Shakspeare.
- Do not see
My fair rose wither; yet look up; behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true love tears. Shakspeare.
- I'll rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact Pernicious to thy peace, chiefly assur'd
Remarkably so late of thy so true,
So faithful, love unequal'd. Milton.
The first great work
Is, that yourself may to yourself be true. Roscommon.
When this fire is kindled, both sides inflame it:
all regard of merit is lost in persons employed, and these only chosen that are true to the party. Temple.
Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight. Dryden.
- True* to the king her principles are sound;
Oh that her practice were but half so sound!
Stedfast in various turns of state she stood,
And seal'd her vow'd affection with her blood. Dryden.
- The truest hearts for Voiture heav'd with sighs;
Voiture was wept by all the brightest eyes. Pope.
True to his charge, the bard preserv'd her long
In honour's limits; such the pow'r of song. Pope.
6. Honest; not fraudulent.

- The thieves have bound the true men: now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week. Shakspeare.
- If king Edward be as true and just,
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up. Shakspeare.
7. Exact; conformable to a rule.
If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden.
- He drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.
Tickel's first book does not want its merit; but I was disappointed in my expectation of a translation nicely true to the original; whereas in those parts where the greatest exactness seems to be demanded, he has been the least careful. Arbutnot.
8. Rightful.
They seize the sceptre;
Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
Anointed King Messiah might be born Barr'd of his right. Milton.
- TRUEBORN. adj. [true and born.] Having a right by birth to any title.
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman. Shakspeare.
- Let him that is a trueborn gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me. Shakspeare.
- TRUEBRED. adj. [true and bred.] Of a right breed.
Two of them I know to be as truebred cowards as ever turned back. Shakspeare.
Bauble do you call him? he's a substantial truebred beast, bravely forehanded. Dryden.

I have known no honest or truehearted man: fare thee well. Shakspeare.
- TRUELOVE. n. s. An herb.
- TRUELOVEKNOT. } n. s. [true, love,
TRUELOVERSKNOT. } and knot.] Lines drawn through each other with many involutions, considered as the emblem of interwoven affection.
I'll carve your name on barks of trees
With trueloveknots, and flourishes,
That shall infuse eternal spring. Hudibras.
- TRUENESS. n. s. [from true.] Sincerity; faithfulness.
The even carriage between two factions proceedeth not always of moderation, but of a *true*ness to a man's self, with end to make use of both. Bacon.
- TRUEPENNY. n. s. [true and penny.] A familiar phrase for an honest fellow.
Say'st thou so? art thou there, truepenny?
Come on. Shakspeare.
- TRUEFFLE. n. s. [truffle, truffe, French.]
In Italy, the usual method for the finding of truffles, or subterraneous mushrooms, called by the Italians tartufali, and in Latin tubera terræ, is by tying a cord to the hind leg of a pig, and driving him, observing where he begins to root. Ray.
- TRUG. n. s. A hod for mortar.
- TRULL. n. s. [trulla, Italian.]
1. A low whore; a vagrant strumpet.
I'm sure I scar'd the dauphin and his trull. Shakspeare.
A trull who sits
By the town wall, and for her living knits. Dryden.
So Mævius, when he drain'd his skull,
To celebrate some suburb trull;
His similes in order set,
And ev'ry crambo he cou'd get;
Before he could his poem close,
The lovely nymph had lost her nose. Swift.
 2. It seems to have had first at least a neutral sense: a girl; a lass; a wench.
Among the rest of all the route,
A passing proper lass,
A white-hair'd trull, of twenty years,
Or neere about there was:

- In stature passing all the rest,
A gallant girl for hewe;
To be compar'd with townish nymphs,
So fair she was to viewe. Turberville.
- TRU'LY. adv. [from true.]
1. According to truth; not falsely; faithfully; honestly.
They thought they might do it, not only willingly, because they loved him; and truly, because such indeed was the mind of the people; but safely, because she who ruled the king was agreed thereto. Sidney.
No untruth can avail the patron long; for things most truly are most behovefully spoken. Hooker.
 2. Really; without fallacy.
Wisdom alone is truly fair. Milton.
Such as are efficaciously called, justified, and sanctified, while they live, are truly holy, and, when they die, are perfectly holy. Pearson.
 3. Exactly; justly.
Right reason is nothing else but the mind of man judging of things truly, and as they are in themselves. South.
 4. Indeed: a slight affirmation, almost expletive.
I have not undertaken it out of any wanton pleasure in mine own pen; nor truly without often pondering with myself beforehand what censures I might incur. Wotton.
- TRUMP. n. s. [trompe, Dutch, and old French; tromba, Italian.]
1. A trumpet; an instrument of warlike musick.
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field. Shakspeare.
Yet first to those ychain'd in sleep,
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep. Milton.
I heard
The neighing couriers and the soldiers cry,
And sounding trumps that seem'd to-tear the sky. Dryden.
- Beneath this tomb an infant lies,
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.
When the archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall wish their lives below
Had been as short as thine! Wesley.
2. [corrupted from triumph. Latimer, in a Christmas sermon, exhibited a game at cards, and made the ace of hearts triumph. Fox.] A winning card; a card that has particular privileges in a game.
Him Balto follow'd, but his fate more hard,
Gain'd but one trump and one plebeian card. Pope.
Now her heart with pleasure jumps,
She scarce remembers what is trumps. Swift.
 3. To put to or upon the TRUMPS. To put to the last expedient.
We are now put upon our last trump; the fox is earthed, but I shall send my two terriers in after him. Dryden.

The trumpery in my house bring hither,
For state to catch these thieves. Shakspeare.
 2. Falsehood; empty talk.
Breaking into parts the story of the creation, and delivering it over in a mystical sense, wrapping it up mixed with other their own trumpery, they have sought to obscure the truth thereof. Raleigh.
 3. Something of no value; trifles.
Embrios and idiots, eremits and friars,
White, black, and grey, with all their trumpery. Milton.

Another cavity of the head was stuffed with billet-doux, pricked dances, and other trumpery of the same nature. Addison.

TRUMPET. n. f. [trompette, French and Dutch]

1. An instrument of martial musick founded by the breath.

What's the business,
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? Shakspeare.
If any man of quality will maintain upon Edmund earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet. Shakspeare.

As dispers'd souldiers, at the trumpet's call,
Haste to their colours all. Cowley.

He blew
His trumpet, heard in Oreb since perhaps
When God descended, and perhaps once more
To sound at gen'ral doom. Th' angelick blast Filled all the regions. Milton.

The last loud trumpet's wondrous sound
Shall through the rending tombs rebound,
And wake the nations under ground. Rescommon.
Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold,
But they move more in lofty numbers told;
By the loud trumpet which our courage aids,
We learn that sound, as well as sense, persuades. Waller.

The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.
Every man is the maker of his own fortune, and must be in some measure the trumpet of his fame. Tatler.

Let the loud trumpet sound,
Till the roofs all around
The shrill echoes rebound. Pope.

2. In military style, a trumpeter.

He wisely desired, that a trumpet might be first sent for a pass. Clarendon.
Among our forefathers, the enemy, when there was a king in the field, demanded by a trumpet in what part he resided, that they might avoid firing upon the royal pavilion. Addison.

3. One who celebrates; one who praises.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

That great politician was pleased to have the greatest wit of those times in his interests, and to be the trumpet of his praises. Dryden.

To TRUMPET. v. a. [trompeter, French; from the noun.] To publish by sound of trumpet; to proclaim.

That I did love the Moor to live with him,
My downright violence to form my fortunes
May trumpet to the world. Shakspeare.

Why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings! Shakspeare.

They went with sound of trumpet; for they did nothing but publish and trumpet all the reproaches they could devise against the Irish. Bacon.

TRUMPETER. n. f. [from trumpet.]

1. One who sounds a trumpet.

Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines. Shakspeare.
As they returned, a herald and trumpeter from the Scots overtook them. Hayward.
Their men lie securely intrench'd in a cloud,
And a trumpeter hornet to battle sounds loud. Dryden.

2. One who proclaims, publishes, or denounces.
Where there is an opinion to be created of virtue or greatness, these men are good trumpeters. Bacon.
How came so many thousands to fight, and die in the same rebellion? why weret they deceived into it by those spiritual trumpeters, who followed them with continual alarms of damnation if they did not venture life, fortune, and all, in that which those impostors called the cause of God? South.

3. [scolopex.] A fish. Ainsworth.

TRUMPET-FLOWER. n. f. [bignonia.] A tubulous flower. Miller.

1. A short staff; a club; a cudgel.

With his truncheon he so rudely stroke Cymocles twice, that twice him forc'd his foot revoke. Spenser.

Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
Thy leg is a stick compared with this truncheon. Shakspeare.

The English slew divers of them with plummets
of lead tied to a truncheon or staff by a cord. Hayward.

One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.

2. A staff of command.

The hand of Mars
Beckon'd with fiery truncheon my retire. Shakspeare.
No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace,
As mercy does. Shakspeare.

To TRUNCHEON. v. a. [from the noun.]

To beat with a truncheon.

Captain! thou abominable cheater! If captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out of taking their names upon you before you earned them. Shakspeare.

TRUNCHEONEER. n. f. [from truncheon.]

One armed with a truncheon.

I mist the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, Chibs! when I might see from far some forty truncheoneers draw to her succour. Shakspeare.

To TRUNDLE. v. n. [trondeler, Picard French; trundl, a bowl, Saxon.] To roll; to bowl along.

In the four first it is heaved up by several spondees intermixed with proper breathing places, and at last trundles down in a continued line of dactyls. Addison.

TRUNDLE. n. f. [trundl, Saxon.] Any round rolling thing.

TRUNDLE-TAIL. n. f. Round tail.

TRUNK. n. f. [truncus, Latin; trunc, Fr.]

1. The body of a tree.

He was
The ivy, which had hid my princely trunk,
And suckt my verdure out on 't. Shakspeare.

About the mossy trunk I wound me soon;
For high from ground the branches would require Thy utmost reach. Milton.

Creeping 'twixt 'em all, the mantling vine
Does round their trunks her purple clusters twine. Dryden.

Some of the largest trees have seeds no bigger than some diminutive plants, and yet every seed is a perfect plant, with a trunk, branches, and leaves, inclosed in a shell. Bentley.

2. The body without the limbs of an animal.

The charm and venom which they drunk
Their blood with secret filth infected hath,
Being diffused through the senseless trunk. Spenser.
Thou bring'st me happiness and peace, son John;
But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, wither'd trunk. Shakspeare.

3. The main body of any thing.

The large trunks of the veins discharge the reffluent blood into the next adjacent trunk, and so on to the heart. Ray.

4. [trunc, French.] A chest for clothes; sometimes a small chest commonly lined with paper.

Neither press, coffer, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakspeare.

Some odd fantastick lord would fain
Cafry in trunks, and all my drudgery do. Dryden.

Where a young man learned to dance, there happened to stand an old trunk in the room; the idea of which had so mixed itself with the turns of all his dances, that, though he could dance excellently well, yet it was only whilst that trunk was there; nor could he perform well in any other place, unless that, or some such other trunk, had its due position in the room. Locke.

Your poem sunk,
And sent in quires to line a trunk;
If still you be dispos'd to rhyme,
Go try your hand a second time. Swift.

5. The proboscis of an elephant, or other animal.

Leviathan that at his gills
Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milton.
When elephant 'gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and castles jostled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty. Shakspeare.

Some their forked tails stretch forth on high,
And tear the twinkling stars from trembling sky. Fairfax.

God comprises all the good we value in the creatures, as the sun doth the light that twinkles in the stars. Boyle.

The star of love,

That twinkles you to fair Almeyda's bed. Dryden.

Think you your new French profelytes are come
To starve abroad, because they starv'd at home?
Your benefices twinkled from afar. Dryden.

So weak your charms, that, like a winter's night Twinkling with stars, they freeze me while they light. Dryden.

These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures; for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture, tremble each of them apart; and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremors, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.

2. To open and shut the eye by turns.

The owl fell a moping and twinkling. L'Estr.

And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will strangle thee. Shakspeare.

To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned, that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and still he twisted on, suffering an ass to eat up all that was finished. Taylor.

Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would she in friendship, peace, and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty;
And should we both in this condition
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition;
Else these two passions by the way
May chance to shew us scurvy play. Prior.

The task were harder to secure my own
Against the power of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind. Lyttleton.

2. To contort; to writhe.

Either double it into a pyramidal, or twist it

Of thy great soul thou art, longing to twist
Bays with that ivy which so early kist Thy youthful temples. Waller.

6. To unite; to insinuate.

When avarice twists itself, not only with the practice of men, but the doctrines of the church;
when ecclesiasticks dispute for money, the mischief seems fatal. Decay of Piety.

To TWIST. v. n. To be contorted; to be convolved.

In an ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is a circumvolution or insertion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbutnot.

Deep in her breast he plung'd the shining sword:
Th' Inachians view the slain with vast surprise,
Her twisting volumes, and her rolling eyes. Pope.

TWIST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing made by convolution, or winding two bodies together.

Minerva nurs'd him
Within a twist of twining osiers laid. Addison.

2. A single string of a cord.

Winding a thin string about the work hazards its breaking, by the fretting of the several twists against one another. Moxon.

3. A cord; a string.

Through these labyrinths, not my grov'ling wit,
But thy silk twist, let down from heav'n to me,
Did both conduct and teach me, how by it
To climb to thee. Herbert.

About his chin the twist
He ty'd, and soon the strangled soul dismiss'd. Dryden.

4. Contortion; writhe.

Not the least turn or twist in the fibres of any one animal, which does not render them more proper for that particular animal's way of life than any other cast or texture. Addison.

5. The manner of twisting.

Jack shrunk at first sight of it; he found fault with the length, the thickness, and the twist. Arbutnot.

T W I

TWISTER. n. f. [from twist.]

1. One who twists; a ropemaker.
2. The instrument of twisting. To this word I have annexed some remarkable lines, which explain twist in all its senses.

When a twister a twisting will twist him a twist,
For the twisting of his twist he three twines doth intwine;

But if one of the twines of the twist do untwist,
The twine that untwisteth untwisteth the twist.
Untwirling the twine that untwisteth between,
He twirls with his twister the two in a twine;
Then twice having twisted the twines of the twine,
He twicheth the twine he had twined in twain.
The twain that in twining before in the twine,
As twines were intwisted, he now doth untwine,
*Twist the twain intwisting a twine more between,
He, twirling his twister, makes a twist of the twine.

Wallis

To TWIT. v. a. [Egyptian, Saxon.] To sneer; to flout; to reproach.

When approaching the stormy flowers
We mought with our shoulders bear off the sharp showers,

And sooth to saine, nought seemeth like strife,
That shepherds so twiten each other's life. Spenser.

When I protest true loyalty to her,
She twits me with my falsehood to my friend.

Shakespeare.

Æsop minds men of their errors, without twit- ting them for what's amiss. L'Estrange.

This these scoffers twitted the christians with.

Tilloson.

Galen bled his patients, till by fainting they could bear no longer; for which he was twitted in his own time. Baker.

To TWITCH. v. a. [epicrian, Saxon.]

To vellicate; to pluck with a quick motion; to snatch; to pluck with a hasty motion.

He rose, and twitch'd his mantle blue,
To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

Milton.

Twitch'd by the sleeve, he mouths it more and more. Dryden.

With a furious leap
She sprung from bed, disturbed in her mind,
And fear'd at ev'ry step a twitching spright behind.

Dryden.

Thrice they twitch'd the diamond in her ear.

Pope.

TWITCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A quick pull; a sudden vellication.

But Hudibras gave him a twitch
As quick as lightning in the breech. Hudibras.

The lion gave one hearty twitch, and got his feet out of the trap, but left his claws behind.

L'Estrange.

2. A contraction of the fibres.

Other confed'rate pairs
Contract the fibres, and the twitch produce,
Which gently pushes on the grateful food
To the wide stomach, by its hollow road. Blackm.

Mighty physical their fear is;
For soon as noise of combat near is,
Their heart defending to their breeches,
Must give their stomachs cruel twitches. Prior.

A fit of the stone is the cure, from the inflammation and pain occasioning convulsive twitches. Sharp.

TWITCHGRASS. n. f. A plant.

Twitchgrass is a weed that keeps some land loose, hollow, and draws away the virtue of the ground. Mortimer.

Twilight, short arbiter 'twixt day and night.
Milton.

Two. adj. [twai, Gothick; two, Saxon.]

1. One and one.

Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch;
Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth;
Between two blades, which bears the better temper;
Between two horses, which doth bear him best;
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,
I have some shallow spirit of judgment. Shakespeare.

Three words it will three times report, and then the two latter for some times. Bacon.

Fifteen chambers were to lodge us two and two together. Bacon.

They lay

By two and two across the common way. Dryden.

2. It is used in composition.

Next to the raven's age, the Pylian king
Was longest liv'd of any two-legg'd thing. Dryden.

A rational animal better described man's essence, than a two-legged animal, with broad nails, and without feathers. Locke.

The two-shap'd Eriethonius had his birth
Without a mother, from the teeming earth. Addison.

Her register was a two-leaved book of record, one page containing the names of her living, and the other of her deceased members. Ayliffe.

TWO'EDGED. adj. [two and edge.] Having an edge on either side.

Clarissa drew, with tempting grace,
A two-edg'd weapon from her shining case. Pope.

TWO'FOLD. adj. [two and fold.] Double;
two of the same kind; or two different things coexisting.

Our prayer against sudden death importeth a two- fold desire, that death when it cometh may give us some convenient respite, or if that be denied us of God, yet we may have wisdom to provide always before-hand. Hooker.

Through mirksome air her ready way she makes,
Her two-fold team, of which two black as pitch,
And two were brown, yet each to each unlike Did softly swim away. Fairy Queen.

O thou! the earthly author of my blood,
Whose youthful spirit in me regenerate,
Doth now with two-fold vigour lift me up,
To reach at victory above my head,
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point.

Shakespeare.

Our two-fold seas wash either side. Dryden.

Time and place taken for distinguishable portions of space and duration, have each of them a two-fold acceptation. Locke.

Ewes, that erst brought forth but single lambs,
Now dropp'd their two-fold burdens. Prior.

Holiness may be taken in a two-fold sense; for that external holiness, which belongs to persons or things, offered to God; or for those internal graces which sanctify our natures. Atterbury.

TWO'FOLD. adv. Doubly.

A proselyte you make two-fold more the child of hell than yourselves. Matthew.

T Y P

TWO'HANDED. adj. [two and hand.]

To TYE. v. a. To bind. See TIE.

TYE. n. f. [See TIE.] A knot; a bond or obligation.

Lay your Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tye
For ever knit. Shakespeare.

I have no tye upon you to be true,
But that which loosen'd your's, my love to you.

Dryden.

Honour's a sacred tye, the law of kings,
The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,
That aids and strengthens virtue where it meets her,
And imitates her actions where she is not;
It ought not to be sported with. Addison.

Lend me aid, I now conjure thee, lend,
By the soft tye and sacred name of friend. Pope.

TY'GER. n. f. See TIGER.

TYKE. n. f. [See TIKE.] Tyke in Scottish still denotes a dog, or one as contemptible and vile as a dog; and thence perhaps comes teague.

Base tyke, call'st thou me host? now,
By this hand, I swear I scorn the term. Shakespeare.

TY'MBAL. n. f. [tymbal, French.] A kind of kettledrum.

Yet, gracious charity! indulgent guest!
Were not thy pow'r exerted in my breast,
My speeches would send up unheeded pray'r:
The scorn of life would be but wild despair:
A tymbal's sound were better than my voice,
My faith were form, my eloquence were noise.

Prior.

TYMPANI'TES. n. f. [τυμπανιτης.]
That particular sort of dropsy that swells the belly up like a drum, and is often cured by tapping.

TY'MPANUM. n. f. A drum; a part of the ear, so called from its resemblance to a drum.

The three little bones in meatu auditorio, by firming the tympanum, are a great help to the hearing. Wifeman.

TYMPANY. n. f. [from tympanum, Lat.]
A kind of obstructed flatulence that swells the body like a drum; the wind dropsy.

Hope, the christian grace, must be proportioned and temperate to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympany of hope. Hammond.

He does not shew us Rome great suddenly;
As if the empire were a tympany;
But gives it natural growth, tells how and why
The little body grew so large and high. Suckling.

Others that affect

A lofty stile, swell to a tympany. Roscommon.

Pride is no more than an unnatural tympany, that rises in a bubble, and spends itself in a blast.

L'Estrange.

Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.

A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

The air is so rarified in this kind of dropsical tumour, as makes it hard and tight like a drum, and from thence it is called a tympany. Arbutnot.

TY'NY. adj. Small.

He that has a little tiny wit,
Must make content with his fortunes fit. Shaksp.

TYPE. n. f. [type, French; typus, Latin;
τύπος]

T Y P

1. Emblem; mark of something.

Clean renouncing
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short bolster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understanding again the honest men. Shaksp.
Thy emblem, gracious queen, the British rose,
Type of sweet rule, and gentle majesty. Prior.

2. That by which something future is prefigured.

Informing them by types
And shadows of that destin'd seed to bruise
The serpent, by what means he shall achieve Mankind's deliverance. Milton.
The apostle shews the christian religion to be in truth and substance what the jewish was only in type and shadow. Tillotson.

3. A stamp; a mark. Not in use.

Thy father bears the type of king of Naples,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman. Shaksp.
What good is cover'd with the face of heav'n
To be discover'd, that can do me good?
—Th' advancement of your children, gentle lady!
—Up to some scaffold, there to lose their heads!
—No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory. Shaksp.

Which, though in their mean types small matter
doth appeare,
Yet both of good account are reckon'd in the shiere. Drayton.

4. A printing letter.

To TYPE. v. a. To prefigure.

He ratified ceremonial and positive laws, in respect of their spiritual use and signification, and by fulfilling all things typed and prefigured by them. White.

TY'PICAL. } adj. [typique, French; typi- TY'PICK. } cus, Latin.] Emblematic; figurative of something else.

The Levitical priesthood was only typical of the christian; which is so much more holy and honourable than that, as the institution of Christ is more excellent than that of Moses. Atterbury.

Hence that many courses ran,
Hand-in-hand, a goodly train,
To bless the great Eliza's reign;
And in the typic glory show
What fuller bliss Maria shall bestow. Prior.

TY'PICALLY. adv. [from typical.] In a typical manner.

This excellent communicativeness of the divine nature is typically represented, and mysteriously exemplified by the Porphyrian scale of being. Norris.

TY'PICALNESS. n. f. [from typical.] The state of being typical.

To TY'PIFY. v. a. [from type.] To figure; to show in emblem.

The resurrection of Christ hath the power of a pattern to us, and is so typified in baptism, as an engagement to rise to newness of life. Hammond.

Our Saviour was typified indeed by the goat that was slain; at the effusion of whose blood, not only the hard hearts of his enemies relented, but the stony rocks and vail of the temple were shattered. Brown.

TYPO'GRAPHER. n. f. [τύπος and γράφω.] A printer.

TYPOGRA'PHICAL. adj. [from typography.]

Charge him home that he affects Tyrannick power. Shaksp.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shaksp.
Domitian had been tyrannical; and in his time many noble houses were overthrown by false accusations. Bacon.

Subdue and quell, o'er all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick pow'r. Milton.
If the spirit of a subject be rebellious, in a prince it will be tyrannical and intolerable. Taylor.
She hath recourse
To tears and prayers, again she feels the smart
Of a fresh wound from the tyrannick dart. Denham.

Our sects a more tyrannick power assume,
And would for scorpions change the rods of Rome. Rescommon.

And by the nobles, by his commons curst,
Th' oppressor rul'd tyrannick where he durst;
Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod,
And treats alike his vassals and his God. Pope.

TYRA'NNICALLY. adv. [from tyrannical.] In manner of a tyrant.

TYRA'NNICIDE. n. f. [tyranus and caedo, Latin.] The act of killing a tyrant.

To TY'RANNISE. v. n. [from tyranniser, Fr. from tyrant.] To play the tyrant; to act with rigour and imperiousness.

While we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear will not be able to tyrannise over us. Hooker.

Then 'gan Carausius tyrannise anew,
And 'gainst the Romans bent their proper power,
And so Aleetus treacherously slew,
And took on him the robe of emperor. Spenser.

I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him, that thus doth tyrannise o'er me. Shaksp.
A crew, whom like ambition joins
With him, or under him to tyrannise. Milton.

Beauty had crown'd you, and you must have been
The whole world's mistress, other than a queen;
All had been rivals, and you might have spar'd,
Or kill'd and tyrannise'd without a guard. Waller.

He does violence to his own faculties, tyrannises over his own mind, and usurps the prerogative that belongs to truth alone, which is, to command by its own authority. Locke.

TY'RANNOUS. adj. [from tyrant.] Ty- rannical; despotick; arbitrary; severe; cruel; imperious. Not in use.

It is strange to see the unmanlike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their masterhood nothing without doing injury to them. Sidney.

Lately grown into a loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold, an usurper. Spenser.

T Y R

Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shaksp.
'Tis excellent

To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant. Shaksp.
Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas!
Than the queen's life? Shaksp.

Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton.
After the death of this tyrannous and ambitious king, these writings came abroad. Temple.

TY'RANNY. n. f. [tyrannis, Lat. tyrannie, Fr.]

1. Absolute monarchy imperiously administered.

Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and, in th' excess of joy,
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heav'n. Milton.
The cities fell often under tyrannies, which spring naturally out of popular governments. Temple.

2. Unresisted and cruel power.

Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. Shaksp.

3. Cruel government; rigorous command.

Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dares not check thee. Shaksp.
Suspicious dispose kings to tyranny, and husbands to jealousy. Bacon.

God, in judgment just,
Subjects him from without to violent lords;
Who oft as undeservedly intral
His outward freedom: tyranny must be. Milton.

4. Severity; rigour; inclemency.

The tyranny o' the open night's too tough
For nature to endure. Shaksp.

TY'RANT. n. f. [τυραννός; tyrannus, Lat. Rowland contends that this word, with the correspondent Greek and Latin, is derived from tir, Welch and Erse, land, and rhanner, Welch, to share; q. d. tir-banner, a sharer, or divider of and among his vassals.]

1. An absolute monarch governing imperiously.

2. A cruel, despotick, and severe master; an oppressor.

Love to a yielding heart is a king, but to a resisting is a tyrant. Sidney.
I would not be the villain that thou think'st,
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to begot. Shaksp.

Dissembling courtesy! how fine this tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds! Shaksp.
The house of woe, and dungeon of our tyrant. Milton.

Consider those grand agents and lieutenants of the devil, by whom he scourges and plagues the world under him, to wit, tyrants; and was there ever any tyrant who was not also false and perfidious? South.
Thou mean'st to kill a tyrant, not a king. Dryden.

When tyrant custom had not shackled man,
But free to follow nature was the mode. Temple.

TYRE. n. f. [properly tire.] See TIRE.

I have seen her beset and bedecked all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about the tyre of her head. Hakewill.

TY'RO. n. f. [properly tiro, as in the Lat.] One yet not master of his art; one in his rudiments.

There stands a structure on a rising hill,
Where tyres take their freedom out to kill. Garib.

V

V A C

V Has two powers, expressed in modern English by two characters, v consonant and u vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.

U, the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obscure; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obscure.

V, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f, distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.

VACANCY. n. f. [from vacant.]

1. Empty space; vacancy.

How is't,

That thus you bend your eye on vacancy,
And with th' incorporal air do hold discourse?

Shakspeare.

2. Chasm; space unfilled.

The reader finds a wide vacancy, and knows not how to transport his thoughts to the next particular, for want of some connecting idea.

Watts.

3. [vacance, Fr.] State of a post or employment when it is unsupplied.

They were content to bribe them with the nomination of some bishops, and disposal of the revenues of some churches during the vacancies.

Lesley.

In the vacancy of a bishop, the guardian of the spiritualities was summoned to parliament in the bishop's room.

Ayliffe.

4. [vacances, Fr.] Time of leisure; relaxation; intermission; time unengaged.

If, sometimes, each other's eyes were meet,
Those little vacancies from toil are sweet.

Dryden.

The daily intervals of time and vacancies from necessary labour, together with the one day in seven in the christian world, allow sufficient time.

Watts.

5. Listlessness; emptiness of thought.

When alone, or in company, they sit still without doing any thing, I like it worse; for all dispositions to idleness or vacancy, even before they are habits, are dangerous.

Wotton.

VACANT. adj. [vacant, Fr. vacans, Latin.]

1. Empty; unfilled; void.

Why should the air so impetuously rush into the cavity of the receiver, if there were before no vacant room to receive it?

Boyle.

A better race to bring into their vacant room.

Milton.

2. Free; unencumbered; uncrowded.

Religion is the interest of all; but philosophy of those only that are at leisure, and vacant from the affairs of the world.

More.

A very little part of our life is so vacant from uneasinesses, as to leave us free to the attraction of remoter good.

Locke.

3. Not filled by an incumbent, or possessor.

Left the fiend invade vacant possession.

Milton.

Others, when they allowed the throne vacant, thought the succession should immediately go to the next heir.

Swift.

V A C

4. Being at leisure; disengaged.

They which have the government, scatter the army abroad, and place them in villages to take their victuals of them, at such vacant times as they lie not in camp.

Spenser.

Sir John Berkley was the more vacant for that service, by the reduction of Barnstable.

Clarendon.

Besides those portions of time which the necessities of nature and of civil life extorted from him, there was not a minute of the day which he left vacant.

Fell.

The memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and prevents any chasms of thought, by ideas of what is past.

Addison.

5. Thoughtless; empty of thought; not busy.

The wretched slave,
Who with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread.

Shakspeare.

The duke had a pleasant and vacant face, proceeding from a singular assurance in his temper.

Wotton.

TO VACATE. v. a. [vaco, Lat.]

1. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority.

That after-act vacating the authority of the precedent, tells the world that some remorse touched even Strafford's most implacable enemies.

King Charles.

More.

VACILLATION. n. f. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Lat. vacillation, Fr.] The act or state of reeling or staggering.

The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation.

Derham.

V A G

VACUATION. n. f. [from vacuus, Lat.] The act of emptying.

Diop.

VACUIST. n. f. [from vacuum.] A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.

Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter.

Boyle.

VACUITY. n. f. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Lat. vacuité, Fr.]

1. Emptiness; state of being unfilled.

Rogers.

Redeeming still at night these vacuities of the day.

Fell.

3. Inanity; want of reality.

The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects: but if they'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacuity and emptiness.

Glanville.

VACUOUS. adj. [vacuus, Lat. vacué, Fr.] Empty; unfilled.

Boundless the deep, because I AM who fill Infinity: nor vacuous the space.

Milton.

VACUUM. n. f. [Lat.] Space unoccupied by matter.

Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will shew us some good practical lessons.

Watts.

TO VADE. v. n. [vado, Lat.] To vanish; to pass away.

Be ever gloried here thy sovereign name,
That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made;

Whose frown alone can shake this earthly frame,
And at whose touch the hills in smog shall vade.

Wotton.

VAGABOND. adj. [vagabundus, low Lat. vagabond, Fr.]

1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death;
Vagabond exile: yet I would not buy

Their mercy at the price of one fair word.

Shakspeare.

A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found.

Ayliffe.

2. Wandering; vagrant.

This common body,

Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, lagging the varying tide.

Shakspeare.

Their prayers by envious winds

Blown vagabond or frustrate.

Milton.

VAGABOND. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A vagrant; a wanderer: commonly in a sense of reproach.

V A I

We call those people wanderers and vagabonds, that have no dwelling place. Raleigh.

Reduc'd, like Hannibal, to seek relief
From court to court, and wander up and down
A vagabond in Afric. Addison.

2. One that wanders illegally, without a settled habitation.

Vagabond is a person without a home. Watts.

VAGARY. n. f. [from vagus, Lat.] A wild freak; a capricious frolick,

They chang'd their minds,
Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell,
As they would dance. Milton.

Would your son engage in some frolic, or take a vagary, were it not better he should do it with than without your knowledge? Locke.

VAGINOPE'NNOUS. adj. [vagina and penna, Lat.] Sheath-winged; having the wings covered with hard cases.

VAGOUS. adj. [vagus, Lat. vague, Fr.] Wandering; unsettled. Not in use.

Such as were born and begot of a single woman, through a vagous lust, were called Sporii. Ayliffe.

VAGRANCY. n. f. [from vagrant.] A state of wandering; unsettled condition.

VAGRANT. adj. Wandering; unsettled; vagabond; unfixed in place.

Do not oppose popular mistakes and surmises, or vagrant and fictitious stories. More.

I take good heed what men will think and say;
That beauteous Emma vagrant courtes took,
Her father's house, and civil life forsook. Prior.

Her lips no living bard, I weat,
May say how red, how round, how sweet;
Old Homer only could indite

Their vagrant grace, and soft delight:
They stand recorded in his book,
When Helen smil'd, and Hebe spoke. Prior.

VAGRANT. n. f. [vagant, French.] A sturdy beggar; wanderer; vagabond; man unsettled in habitation. In an ill sense.

Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view,
Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill. Prior.

You'll not the progress of your atoms stay,
Nor to collect the vagrants find a way. Blackmore.

To relieve the helpless poor; to make sturdy vagrants relieve themselves; to hinder idle hands from being mischievous, are things of evident use.

F. Atterbury.

Ye vagrants of the sky,
To right or left unheeded take your way. Pope.

VAGUE. adj. [vague, Fr. vagus, Lat.]

1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond.

Gray encouraged his men to set upon the vague villains, good neither to live peaceably, nor to fight.

Hayward.

2. Unfixed; unsettled; undetermined; indefinite.

The perception of being, or not being, belongs no more to these vague ideas, signified by the terms, whatsoever and thing, than it does to any other ideas. Locke.

VAIL. n. f. [voile, Fr. This word is now frequently written veil, from velum, Lat. and the verb veil, from the verb velo; but the old orthography commonly derived it, I believe rightly, from the Fr.]

1. A curtain; a cover thrown over any thing to be concealed.

While they supposed to lie hid in their secret sins, they were scattered under a dark vail of forgetfulness. Wisdom.

2. A part of female dress, by which the face and part of the shape is concealed.

3. Money given to servants. It is commonly used in the plural. See VALE.

To VAIL. v. a. To cover. See VEIL.

To VAIL. v. a. [avaler le bonet, French. Addison writes it veil, ignorantly.]

1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.

V A I

They stiffly refused to vail their bonets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by seafarers. Carew.

The virgin 'gan her beavoir vale,
And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale. Fairfax.

2. To let fall in token of respect.

Certain of the Turks galleys, which would not vail their topsails, the Venetians fiercely assailed. Kneller.

Before my princely state let your poor greatness fall,
And vail your tops to me, the sovereign of you all. Drayton.

They had not the ceremony of veiling the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Addison.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.

That furious Scot
'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
Of those turn'd their backs. Shakspeare.

To VAIL. v. n. To yield; to give place; to show respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written veil.

Thy convenience must veil to thy neighbour's necessity; and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity. South.

VAIN. adj. [vain, Fr. vanus, Lat.]

1. Fruitless; ineffectual.

Let no man speak again
To alter this; for counsel is but vain. Shakspeare.
Vain is the force of man,
To crush the pillars which the pile sustain. Dryden.

2. Empty; unreal; shadowy.

Before the passage horrid Hydra stands,
Gorgons, Geryon with his triple frame,
And vain Chimera vomits empty flame. Dryden.
Unmov'd his eyes, and wet his beard appears;
And shedding vain, but seeming real tears. Dryden.

3. Meanly proud; proud of petty things: with of before the cause of vanity.

No folly like vain glory; nor any thing more ridiculous than for a vain man to be still boasting of himself. L'Estrange.

He wav'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryden.

The minstrels play'd on every side,
Vain of their art, and for the mastery vy'd. Dryden.

To be vain is rather a mark of humility than pride. Vain men delight in telling what honours have been done them, what great company they have kept, and the like; by which they plainly confess, that these honours were more than their due, and such as their friends would not believe, if they had not been told: whereas a man truly proud thinks the honours below his merit, and scorns to boast. Swift.

Ah friend! to dazzle let the vain design;
To raise the thought, and touch the heart, be thine. Pope.

Here learn the great unreal wants to feign,
Unpleasing truths here mortify the vain. Savage.
Ye vain! desist from your erroneous strife;
Be wise, and quit the false sublime of life;
The true ambition there alone resides,
Where justice vindicates, and wisdom guides. Young.

4. Showy; ostentatious.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state. Pope.

5. Idle; worthless; unimportant.

Both all things vain, and all who in vain things
Built their fond hopes of glory, or lasting fame,
Or happiness. Milton.

He heard a grave philosopher maintain,
That all the actions of our life were vain,
Which with our sense of pleasure not conspir'd. Denham.

To your vain answer will you have recourse,
And tell 'tis ingemite active force. Blackmore.

6. False; not true.

7. In VAIN. To no purpose; to no end; ineffectually; without effect.

He tempts in vain. Milton.

V A L

Providence and nature never did any thing in vain. L'Estrange.

Strong Halys stands in vain; weak Phlegys flies. Dryden.

The philosophers of old did in vain enquire, whether summum bonum consisted in riches, bodily delights, virtue, or contemplation. Locke.

If we hope for what we are not likely to possess, we act and think in vain, and make life a greater dream and shadow than it really is. Addison.

If from this discourse one honest man shall receive satisfaction, I shall think that I have not written nor lived in vain. West.

VAINGLO'RIOUS. adj. [vanus and gloriosus, Lat.] Boasting without performances; proud in disproportion to desert.

Vain-glorious man, when fluttering wind does blow,
In his light wings is lifted up to sky. Spenser.

Strength to glory aspires Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

This his arrogant and vain-glorious expression witnesseth. Hale.

VAINGLO'RY. n. f. [vana gloria, Latin.]

Pride above merit; empty pride; pride in little things.

He hath nothing of vain-glory, but yet kept state and majesty to the height; being sensible, that majesty maketh the people bow, but vain-glory boweth to them. Bacon.

Expose every blast of vain-glory, every idle thought, to be chastened by the rod of spiritual discipline. Taylor.

This extraordinary person, out of his natural aversion to vain-glory, wrote several pieces which he did not assume the honour of. Addison.

A monarch's sword when mad vain-glory draws,
Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's fear. Pope.

VA'INLY. adv. [from vain.]

1. Without effect; to no purpose; in vain.

Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shakspeare.
In weak complaints you vainly waste your breath;
They are not tears that can revenge his death. Dryden.

2. Proudly; arrogantly.

Humility teaches us to think neither vainly nor vauntingly of ourselves. Delany.

3. Idly; foolishly.

Nor vainly hope to be invulnerable. Milton.
If Lentulus be ambitious, he shall be vainly credulous; presuming his advancement to be decreed by the Sybilline oracles. Grew.

VA'INNESS. n. f. [from vain.] The state of being vain. Pride; falsehood; emptiness.

I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Than lying, vainness, babbling. Shakspeare.

VAIR, or VA'IRY. adj. [in heraldry.] Variegated with coverings of gold, red, or other colours.

VA'IVODE. n. f. [vairvod, a governor, Slavonian.] A prince of the Dacian provinces.

VA'LANCE. n. f. [from Valencia, whence the use of them came. Skinner.] The fringes of drapery hanging round the tester and head of a bed.

My house
Is richly furnished with plate and gold;
Valance of Venice, gold in needlework. Shakspeare.
Thrust the valance of the bed, that it may be full in sight. Swift.

To VA'LANCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with drapery. Not in use.

Old friend, thy face is valanc'd since I saw thee last; com'st thou to beard me? Shakspeare.

VALE. n. f. [val, Fr. vallis, Lat.]

1. A low ground; a valley; a place between two hills. Vale is a poetical word.

V A L

In Ida vale: who knows not Ida vale?
 An hundred shepherds woned. Spenser.
 Met in the vale of Arde. Shakspeare.
 Anchises, in a flow'ry vale,
 Review'd his muster'd race, and took the tale. Dryden.

In those fair vales, by nature form'd to please,
 Where Guadalquivir serpentine with ease. Harte.

2. [From avail, profit; or vale, farewell.
 If from avail, it must be written vail, as Dryden writes. If from vale, which I think is right, it must be vale.] Money given to servants.
 Since our knights and senators account
 To what their fordid, begging vails amount;
 Judge what a wretched share the poor attends,
 Whose whole subsistence on those alms depends. Dryden.
 His revenue, besides vales, amounted to thirty pounds. Swift.

VALEDI'CTION. n. f. [valedico, Lat.] A farewell.
 A valediction forbidding to weep. Donne.

VALEDI'CTORY. adj. [from valedico, Lat.]
 Bidding farewell.

VA'LENTINE. n. f. A sweetheart chosen on Valentine's day.
 Now all nature seem'd in love,
 And birds had drawn their valentines. Wotton.

VALE'RIAN. n. f. [valeriana, Lat. vale- rian, Fr.] A plant.

VA'LET. n. f. [valet, Fr.] A waiting servant.
 Giving cast-clothes to be worn by valets, has a very ill effect upon little minds. Addison.

VALETUDINA'RIAN. } adj. [valetudinaire, VALETU'DINARY. } Fr. valetudo, Lat.]
 Weakly; fickly; infirm of health.
 Physic, by purging noxious humours, prevents sickness in the healthy, or recourse thereof in the valetudinary. Browne.
 Shifting from the warmer vallies to the colder hills, or from the hills to the vales, is a great benefit to the valetudinarian, feeble part of mankind. Derham.
 Some patients have been liable to this symptom, and reduced by it to a valetudinary and very unequal state of health. Blackmore.
 Cold of winter, by stopping the pores of perspiration, keeps the warmth more within; whereby there is a greater quantity of spirits generated in healthful animals, for the case is quite otherwise in valetudinary ones. Cheyne.
Valetudinarians must live where they can command and scold. Swift.

VA'LIANCE. n. f. [from valiant; valliance, Fr.] Valour; personal puissance; fierce-ness; bravery. Not in use.
 With stiff force he shook his mortal lance,
 To let him weet his doughty valiance. Spenser.

VA'LIANT. adj. [valliant, Fr.] Stout; personally puissant; brave. We say, a valiant man; a valiant action.
 Only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles. 1 Samuel.
 Hale, a very valiant fencer, undertook to teach that science in a book, and was laughed at. Walton.
 The church of Antioch might meet at that time to celebrate the memory of such a valiant combat and martyr of Christ. Nelson.

VA'LIANTLY. adv. [from valiant.] Stoutly; with personal strength; with personal bravery.
 Farewel, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:
 Thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shakspeare.

VA'LID. adj. [valide, Fr. validus, Lat.]
 1. Strong; powerful; efficacious; prevalent.
 Perhaps more valid arms,
 Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
 May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Milton.
 2. Having intellectual force; prevalent;
 weighty; conclusive.
 A difference in their sentiments as to particular questions, is no valid argument against the general truth believed by them, but rather a clearer and more solid proof of it. Stephens.

VA'LIDITY. n. f. [validité, Fr. from valid.]
 1. Force to convince; certainty.
 You are persuaded of the validity of that famous
 verse,
 'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear. Pope.
 2. Value. A sense not used.
 To thee and thine
 Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom;
 No less in space, validity, and pleasure,
 Than that conferr'd on Gonerill. Shakspeare.

 wig that shades the face.
 But you, loud firs, who through your curls look big,
 Criticks in plume and white vallancy wig. Dryden.

VA'LLY. n. f. [vallée, Fr. vallis, Lat.]
 A low ground; a hollow between hills.
Vallies are the intervals betwixt mountains. Woodward.
 Live with me, and be my love,
 And we will all the pleasure prove That hills and vallies yield. Raleigh.
 Sweet interchange of hill and valley. Milton.
 I have been ready to freeze on the top of a hill, and in an hour's time after have suffered as great inconvenience from the heat of the valley. Brown.

VA'LOUS. adj. [from valour.] Brave;
 stout; valiant.
 The famous warriors of the antique world
 Us'd trophies to erect in stately wise,
 In which they would the records have enroll'd
 Of their great deeds and valorous emprise. Spenser.
 Captain Jamy is a marvellous valorous gentleman. Shakspeare.

VA'LOUSLY. adv. [from valorous.] In a brave manner.

VA'LOUR. n. f. [valeur, Fr. valor, Lat.
Ainsworth.] Personal bravery; strength;
 prowess; puissance; stoutness.

 And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
 All that impedes thee. Shakspeare.
 Here I contest
 As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
 As ever in ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour. Shakspeare.
 When valour preys on reason,
 It eats the sword it fights with. Shakspeare.
 An innate valour appeared in him, when he put himself upon the soldier's defence, as he received the mortal stab. Howel.
 For contemplation he, and valour form'd;
 For softness she, and sweet attractive grace. Milton.
 Such were these giants; men of high renown!
 For, in those days, might only shall be admir'd,
 And valour, and heroic virtue, call'd. Milton.
Valour gives awe, and promises protection to those who want heart or strength to defend themselves.
 This makes the authority of men among women;
 and that of a master-buck in a numerous herd. Temple.

VA'LUABLE. adj. [valuable, Fr. from value.]
 1. Precious; being of great price.

V A L

2. Worthy; deserving regard.
 A just account of that valuable person, whose remains lie before us. F. Atterbury.
 The value of several circumstances in story, lessens very much by distance of time; though some minute circumstances are very valuable. Swift.

VALUA'TION. n. f. [from value.]
 1. The act of setting a value; appraisement.
 Humility in man consists not in denying any gift that is in him, but in a just valuation of it, rather thinking too meanly than too highly. Ray.
 2. Value set upon any thing.
 No reason I, since of your lives you set
 So slight a valuation, should reserve
 My crack'd one to more care. Shakspeare.
 Take out of men's minds false valuations, and it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things. Bacon.
 The writers expressed not the valuation of the denarius, without regard to its present valuation. Arbutnot.

VALUA'TOR. n. f. [from value.] An appraiser; one who sets upon any thing its price. A word which I have found no where else.
 What valuators will the bishops make use of?
Swift.

VA'LU. n. f. [value, Fr. valor, Latin.]
 1. Price; worth.
 Ye are physicians of no value. Job.
 Learn to live for your own sake, and the service of God; and let nothing in the world be of any value with you, but that which you can turn into a service to God, and a means of your future happiness. Law.
 2. High rate.
 Caesar is well acquainted with your virtues,
 And therefore sets this value on your life:
 Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship,
 And name your terms. Addison.
 3. Rate; price equal to the worth of the thing bought.
 He sent him money; it was with this obliging testimony, that his design was not to pay him the value of his pictures, because they were above any price. Dryden.

TO VA'LU. v. a. [valoir, Fr. from the noun.]
 1. To rate at a certain price.
 When the country grows better inhabited, the tithes and other obventions will be more augmented, and better valued. Spenser.

4. Falsehood; untruth.

Here I may well shew the vanity of that which is reported in the story of Walsingham. Sir J. Davies.

5. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit; idle show; unsubstantial enjoyment; petty object of pride.

Were it not strange if God should have made such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leave them all to be consumed in secular vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employed in his own service? Hocher.

V A N

I must

Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple Some vanity of mine art. Shakespeare.

Cast not her serious wit on idle things; Make her free will slave to vanity. Davies.

Sin with vanity had fill'd the works of men. Milton.

The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their dress; and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equal, if not surpass them, in the vanity of their desires. South.

Think not, when woman's transient breath is fled,

That all her vanities at once are dead; Succeeding vanities she still regards, And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards. Pope.

6. Ostentation; arrogance.

The ground-work thereof is true, however they, through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own antiquity. Spenser.

Whether it were out of the same vanity which possessed all those learned philosophers and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right authors' names, those things which he had read in the scriptures; or fearing the severity of the Arcopagite, and the example of his master Socrates, I cannot judge. Raleigh.

7. Petty pride; pride exerted upon slight grounds; pride operating upon small occasions.

Can you add guilt to vanity, and take A pride to hear the conquests which you make? Dryden.

'Tis an old maxim in the schools, That vanity's the food of fools; Yet now and then your men of wit Will condescend to take a bit. Swift.

The corruption of the world indulges women in great vanity; and mankind seem to consider them in no other view, than as so many painted idols, that are to allure and gratify their passions. Law.

To VA'NQUISH. v. a. [vaincre, Fr.]

1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue.

Were't not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar, The fearful French, whom you late vanquish'd, Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you? Shakespeare.

They subdued and vanquish'd the rebels in all encounters. Clarendon.

The gods the victor, Cato the vanquish'd chose: But you have done what Cato could not do, To chuse the vanquish'd, and restore him too. Dryden.

2. To confute.

This bold assertion has been fully vanquish'd in a late reply to the bishop of Meaux's treatise. F. Atterbury.

VA'NQUISHER. n. s. [from vanquish.]

VA'POROUS. adj. [vaporeux, Fr. from vapour.]

1. Full of vapours or exhalations; fummy.

The vaporous night approaches. Shakspeare.
This shifting our abode from the warmer and more vaporous air of the vallies, to the colder and more subtle air of the hills, is a great benefit to the valetudinarian part. Derham.

2. Windy; flatulent.

If the mother eat much beans, or such vaporous food, it endangereth the child to become lunatick. Bacon.

Some more subtle corporeal element may so equally bear against the parts of a little vaporous moisture, as to form it into round drops. More.

The food which is most vaporous and perspirable, is the most easily digested. Arbuthnot.

A little tube, jetting out from the extremity of an artery, may carry off these vaporous steams of the blood. Cheyne.

VAPOUR. n. f. [vapour, Fr. vapor, Lat.]

1. Any thing exhalable; any thing that mingles with the air.

Jove a dreadful storm call'd forth
Against our navy; covered shore and all
With gloomy vapours. Chapman.

Vapour, and mist, and exhalation hot. Milton.

When first the sun too pow'ful beams displays,
It draws up vapours which obscure its rays:
But ev'n those clouds at last adorn its way,
Reflect new glories, and augment the day. Pope.

2. Fume; steam.

The morning is the best, because the imagination is not clouded by the vapours of meat. Dryden.

In distilling hot spirits, if the head of the still be taken off, the vapour which ascends out of the still will take fire at the flame of a candle, and the flame will run along the vapour from the candle to the still. Newton.

For the imposthume, the vapour of vinegar, and any thing which creates a cough, are proper. Arbuthnot.

3. Wind; flatulence.

In the Thessalian witches, and the meetings of witches that have been recorded, great wonders they tell, of carrying in the air, transforming themselves into other bodies. These fables are the effects of imagination: for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon.

4. Mental fume; vain imagination; fancy unreal.

If his sorrow bring forth amendment, he hath the grace of hope, though it be clouded over with a melancholy vapour, that it be not discernible even to himself. Hammond.

5. [In the plural.] Diseases caused by flatulence, or by diseased nerves; hypochondriacal maladies; melancholy;
spleen.

To this we must ascribe the spleen, so frequent in studious men, as well as the vapours, to which the other sex are so often subject. Spectator.

To VA'POUR. v. n. [vaporo, Lat.]

1. To pass in a vapour or fume; to fly off in evaporations.

The whole world vapours in thy breath. Donne.

2. To emit fumes.

Swift running waters vapour not so much as standing waters. Bacon.

3. To bully; to brag.

Not true, quoth he? Howe'er you vapour,
I can what I affirm make appear. Hudibras.

These are all the mighty pow'rs
You vainly boast, to cry down ours;
And what in real value's wanting,
Supply with vapouring and ranting. Hudibras.

That I might not be vapour'd down by insignificant testimonies, I used the name of your society to annihilate all such arguments. Glanville.

Be you to us but kind;
Let Dutchmen vapour, Spaniards curse,
No sorrow we shall find. E. Dorset.

To VA'POUR. v. a. To effuse, or scatter in fume or vapour.

Break off this last lamenting kiss,
Which sucks two souls, and vapours both away. Donne.

He'd laugh to see one throw his heart away,
Another sighing vapour forth his soul,
A third to melt himself in tears. Ben Jonson.

Opium loseth some of its poisonous quality, if vapoured out, and mingled with spirit of wine. Bacon.

It must be holpen by somewhat which may fix the silver, never to be restored, or vapoured away, when incorporated into such a mass of gold. Bacon.

VARIABLE. adj. [variable, Fr. variabiles, Lat.] Changeable; mutable; inconstant.

O swear not by the inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakspeare.

Haply countries different,
With variable objects, shall expel
This something settled matter in his heart. Shakspeare.

By the lively image of other creatures did those ancients represent the variable passions of mortals;
as by serpents were signified deceivers. Raleigh.

His heart I know how variable, and vain, Self-left. Milton.

ance* with others, which are all admirably consistent. Sprat.

She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen:
While a kind glance at her pursuer flies,
How much at variance are her feet and eyes! Pope.

If the learned would not sometimes submit to the ignorant; the old to the weaknesses of the young;
there would be nothing but everlasting variance in the world. Swift.

Many bleed,
By shameful variance betwixt man and man. Thomson.

Who are they that set the first and second articles at variance with each other, when for fourteen centuries, and more, they have agreed most amicably together? Waterland.

VARIATION. n. f. [variatio, Latin; variation, French.]

1. Change; mutation; difference from itself.

After much variation of opinions, the prisoner was acquitted of treason, but by most voices found guilty of felony. Hayward.

The operation of agents will easily admit of intention and remission; but the essences of things are conceived not capable of any such variation. Locke.

The same of our writers is confined to these two islands; and it is hard it should be limited in time as much as place, by the perpetual variations of our speech. Swift.

There is but one common matter, which is diversified by accidents; and the same numerical quantity, by variations of texture, may constitute successively all kinds of body. Benley.

2. Difference; change from one to another.

In some other places are more females born than males; which, upon this variation of proportion, I recommend to the curious. Graunt.

The shells are filled with a white spar, which variegates and adds to the beauty of the stone. Woodward.

They had fountains of variegated marble in their rooms. Arbuthnot.

Ladies like variegated tulips show;
'Tis to the changes half the charms we owe:
Such happy spots the nice admirers take,
Fine by defect, and delicately weak. Pope.

VARIEGATION. n. f. [from variegate.]

Diversity of colours.

Plant your choice tulips in natural earth, somewhat impoverished with very fine sand; else they will soon lose their variegations. Evelyn.

VARIETY. n. f. [variété, Fr. varietas, Latin.]

1. Change; succession of one thing to another; intermixture of one thing with another.

All forts are here, that all th' earth yields;
Variety without end. Milton.
Variety is nothing else but a continued novelty. South.

If the sun's light consisted of but one sort of rays, there would be but one colour in the whole world, nor would it be possible to produce any new colour by reflections or refractions; and by consequence that the variety of colours depends upon the composition of light. Newton.

2. One thing of many by which variety is made. In this sense it has a plural.

The inclosed warmth which the earth hath in itself, stirred up by the heat of the sun, assisteth nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh.

VAULT. n. f. [voulte, Fr. volta, Italian; voluta, low Latin.]

1. A continued arch.

O, you are men of stone!

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack. Shakspeare.

The word signifies an orb or sphere. And this shews us both the form of the Mosaic abyss, which was included within this vault; and the form of the habitable earth, which was the outward surface of this vault, or the cover of the abyss. Burnet.

2. A cellar.

Creep into the kill-hole.

He will seek there; neither press, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of. Shakspeare.

The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees Is left this vault to brag of. Shakspeare.

Whether your fruitful fancy lies To banish rats that haunt our vault. Swift.

3. A cave; a cavern.

The silent vaults of death, unknown to light, And hell itself, lie naked to his sight. Sandys.

4. A repository for the dead.

V A U

Shall I not be stifled in the vault, To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in? Shakspeare.

TO VAULT. v. a. [vouter, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To arch; to shape to a vault.

Hath nature given them eyes To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt The fiery orbs above, and the twinn'd stones Upon th' humbled beach? Shakspeare.

2. To cover with an arch.

Over-head the dismal hiss Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew; And flying vaulted either host with fire. Milton.

TO VAULT. v. n. [voltiger, Fr. volteggiare, Italian.]

1. To leap; to jump.

Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself, And falls on th' other. Shakspeare.

The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me, Knowing that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore. Shakspeare.

He is vaulting variable ramps, In your despite, upon your purse. Shakspeare.

If I could win a lady by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakspeare.

Leaning on his lance, he vaulted on a tree. Dryden.

If a man should leap a garret, or vault down the monument, would he leave the memory of a hero behind him? Collier.

Lucan vaulted upon Pegasus with all the heat and intrepidity of youth. Addison.

2. To play the tumbler, or postur-master.

VAULT. n. f. [from the verb.] A leap; a jump.

VAULTAGE. n. f. [from vault.] Arched cellar. Not in use.

He'll call you to so hot an answer for it, That eaves and wormby vaultages of France Shall chide your trespass, and return your mock In second accent to his ordnance. Shakspeare.

VAULTED. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave.

Restore the lock! she cries, and all around Restore the lock! the vaulted roofs rebound. Pope.

VALTER. n. f. [from vault.] A leaper; a jumper; a tumbler.

VULTY. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave. A bad word.

I will kiss thy detestable bones, And put my eye-balls in thy vulty brows, And ring these fingers with thy household worms. Shakspeare.

I'll say that's not the lark whose notes do beat The vulty heav'ns so high above our heads. Shakspeare.

TO VAUNT. v. a. [vanter, French.]

To boast; to display with ostentation.

Not that great champion Whom famous poets' verse so much doth vaunt, And hath for twelve huge labours high extoll'd, So many furies and sharp hits did haunt. Spenser.

Not any damsel which her vaunteth most In skilful knitting of soft silken twine: Spenser.

My vanquisher, spoil'd of his vaunted spoil. Milton.

TO VAUNT. v. n.

1. To play the braggart; to talk with ostentation; to make vain show; to boast.

You say, you are a better soldier; Let it appear so; make your vaunting true. Shakspeare.

The illusions of magick were put down, and their vaunting in wisdom reproved with disgrace. Wisd.

So spake th' apostate angel, though in pain; Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair. Milton.

Pride, which prompts a man to vaunt and over-value what he is, does incline him to disvalue what he has. Government of the Tongue.

U B I

2. I scarcely know in what sense Dryden has used this word, unless it be miswritten for vaults.

'Tis he: I feel him now in ev'ry part;
Like a new world he vaunts about my heart.

Dryden.

VAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Brag; boast; vain ostentation.

Sir John Perrot bent his course not to that point, but rather quite contrary, in scorn, and in vain vaunt of his own counsels.

Spenser.

Him I seduc'd

With other promises and other vaunts.

Milton.

Such vaunts as his who can with patience read, Who thus describes his hero when he's dead?

In heat of action slain, he scorns to fall,

But still maintains the war, and fights at all.

Glanville.

VAUNT. n. f. [from avant, French.]

The first part. Not used.

Our play

Leaps o'er the vaunt and firklings.

Shakspeare.

VAUNTER. n. f. [vanteur, French; from vaunt.] Boaster; braggart; man given to vain ostentation.

Some feign

To menage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain.

Spenser.

Tongue-valiant hero! vaunter of thy might!

In threats the foremost, but the last in fight.

Dryd.

VAUNTFUL. adj. [vaunt and full.]

Boastful; ostentatious.

Whiles all the heavens on lower creatures smil'd,

Young Clarion, with vauntful lustihed,

After his guise did cast abroad to fare.

Spenser.

VAUNTINGLY. adv. [from vaunting.]

Boastfully; ostentatiously.

I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,

That thou wert cause of noble Glotter's death.

Shakspeare.

VAUNTMURE. n. f. [avant mur, French.]

A false wall; a work raised before the main wall.

With another engine named the warwolfe, he pierced with one stone, and cut, as even as a thread,

two vauntmures.

Camden.

This warlike captain, daily attempting the van- mures, in the end by force obtained the same; and so possessed of the place, desperately kept it till greater help came running in; who, with wonderful expedition, clapt up a strong covering betwixt the wall and the vauntmure.

Knolles.

VA'WARD. n. f. [van and ward.] Forepart. Obsolete.

Since we have the va'ward of the day,

My love shall hear the musick of my hounds.

Shakspeare.

Marcus,

Their bands i' th' va'ward are the Antiates

Of their best trust.

Shakspeare.

He desired nothing more than to have confirmed his authority in the minds of the vulgar, by the present and ready attendance of the vayvod.

Knolles.

UBERTY. n. f. [ubertas, Latin.] Abundance; fruitfulness.

UBICATION. } n. f. [from ubi, Latin.]

UBI'ETY. } Local relation; where-ness. A scholastick term.

Relations, ubications, duration, the vulgar philosophy admits to be something; and yet to enquire in what place they are, were gross.

Glanville.

UBIQUITARY. adj. [from ubique, Lat.]

Existing every where.

For wealth and an ubiquitary commerce, none can exceed her.

Howel.

UBIQUITARY. n. f. [from ubique, Lat.]

One that exists every where.

How far wide is Aquinas, which saith, by the same reason that an angel might be in two places, he might be in as many as you will? See now, either

Xavier is every where, or else the carcase of a friar is more subtle than the nature of an angel. To conclude, either Aquinas is false, or the papists ubiquitaries.

Hall.

VEG

UBIQUITY. n. f. [from ubique, Latin.]

Omnipresence; existence at the same time in all places.

In the one there is attributed to God death, whereof divine nature is not capable; in the other, ubiquity unto man, which human nature admitteth not.

Hooker.

Pem she hight,

A solemn wight,

As you should meet

In any street

In that ubiquity.

Ben Jonson.

Could they think that to be infinite and immense, the ubiquity of which they could thrust into a corner of their closet?

South.

UDDER. n. f. [uden, Sax. uder, Dutch; uber, Latin.]

The breast or dugs of a cow, or other large animal.

A lionsess, with udders all drawn dry,

Lay couching head on ground.

Shakspeare.

Sithence the cow

Produc'd an ampler store of milk; the she-goat,

Not without pain, dragg'd her distended udder.

Prior.

UDDERED. adj. [from udder.] Furnished with udders.

Marian soft could stroke the udder'd cow.

Gay.

VEAL. n. f. [veal, a calf, veeler, vesler, to bring forth a calf, old French; vitellus,

Latin.] The flesh of a calf killed for

the table.

Wouldst thou with mighty beef augment thy meal,

Seek Leadenhall; St. James's sends thee veal.

Gay.

VE'CTION. } n. f. [vectio, vectito,

VECTITATION. } Latin.] The act of carrying, or being carried.

Enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots;

a species of vectitation seldom used among the an-tients.

Arbutnot.

VE'CTURE. n. f. [veitura, Latin.] Carriage.

Three things one nation selleth unto another; the commodity as nature yieldeth it, the manufacture, and the veiture or carriage.

Bacon.

To VEER. v. n. [virer, French.] To turn about.

Nigh river's mouth, where wind

Veers oft, as oft he steers and shifts her sail.

Milton.

If a wild uncertainty prevail,

And turn your veering heart with ev'ry gale;

You lose the fruit of all your former care,

For the sad prospect of a just despair.

Roscommon.

I have no taste of the noisy praise

Of giddy crowds, as changeable as winds;

Servants to change, and blowing with the tide

Of swollen success; but veering with its ebb.

Dryd.

A-head the master pilot steers,

And as he leads, the following navy veers.

Dryden.

It is a double misfortune to a nation given to change, when they have a sovereign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people.

Addison.

The wind veered about to north-west.

Derham.

To VEER. v. a.

1. To let out.

As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all sail; so to take it in and contract it, is of no less praise when the argument doth ask it.

Ben Jonson.

2. To turn; to change.

I see the haven nigh at hand,

To which I mean my weary course to bend;

Veer the main-sheet, and bear up with the land.

Spenser.

Sailing farther, it veers its lily to the west, and regardeth that quarter wherein the land is nearer or greater.

Brown.

VEGETABILITY. n. f. [from vegetable.]

Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without sensation.

The coagulating spirits of salts, and lapidifical juice of the sea, entering the parts of the plant, overcome its vegetability, and convert it unto a lapide-ous substance.

Brown.

VEG

VEGETABLE. n. f. [vegetabilis, school

Latin; vegetable, French.] Any thing that has growth without sensation, as plants.

Vegetables are organized bodies, consisting of various parts, containing vessels furnished with different juices; and taking in nourishment from without, usually by means of a root fixed to the earth, or to some other body, as in the generality of plants; sometimes by means of pores distributed over the whole surface, as in sub-marine plants.

Hill.

Let brutes and vegetables that cannot drink,

So far as drought and nature urges, think.

Waller.

There are several kinds of creatures in the world, and degrees of dignity amongst them; some being more excellent than others, animate more than inanimate, sensitives more than vegetables, and men more than brutes.

Wilkins.

In vegetables it is the shape, and in bodies not propagated by seed it is the colour, we most fix on.

Locke.

Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees.

Watts.

VEGETABLE. adj. [vegetabilis, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a plant.

The vegetable world, each plant and tree,

From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,

To creeping moss.

Prior.

Both mechanisms are equally curious, from one uniform juice to extract all the variety of vegetable juices; or from such variety of food to make a fluid very near uniform to the blood of an animal.

Arbutnot.

2. Having the nature of plants.

Amidst them stood the tree of life,

High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit

Of vegetable gold.

Milton.

That vegetative terrestrial hath been ever the standing fund, out of which is derived the matter of all animal and vegetable bodies.

Woodward.

To VEGETATE. v. n. [vegeto, Latia.]

To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow without sensation.

Rain-water may be endued with some vegetating or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oleo-particles.

Ray.

As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees.

Woodward.

See dying vegetables life sustain;

See life dissolving vegetate again.

Pope.

VEGETATION. n. f. [from vegeto, Lat.]

1. The power of producing the growth of plants.

The exterior surface consisted of a terrestrial matter proper for the nourishment of plants, being little entangled with mere mineral matter, that was unfit for vegetation.

Woodward.

The sun, deep-darting to the dark retreat

Of vegetation, sets the steaming power

At large.

Thomson.

Love warbles through the vocal groves,

And vegetation paints the plain.

Anonymous.

2. The power of growth without sensation.

Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility.

Hooker.

VEH

Homer makes deities of the vegetative faculties and virtues of the field. Broome.

VEGETATIVENESS. n. f. [from vegetative.] The quality of producing growth.
VEGETE. adj. [vegetus, Latin.] Vigorous; active; sprightly.

The soul was vegete, quick and lively; full of the youthfulness and spriteliness of youth. South.
The faculties in age must be less vegete and nimble than in youth. Wallis.

VEGETIVE. adj. [from vegeto, Latin.] Vegetable; having the nature of plants.
Nor rent off, but cut off ripe bean with a knife, For hindering it of his vegetive life. Tusser.
VEGETIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.] A vegetable.

Hence vegetives receive their fragrant birth, And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Sandys.
The tree still panted in th' unfinished part, Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryd.

VEHEMENCE. } n. f. [vehementia, Lat.]
VEHEMENCY. }

1. Violence; force.
Universal hubbub wild,
Of stunning sounds and voices all confus'd,
Assaults his ear with loudest vehemence. Milton.

2. Ardour; mental violence; fervour.
Think ye are men; deem it not impossible for you to err: first impartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred, and still doth feed these opinions in you. Hooker.

The best persuasions
Fail not to use; and with what vehemency
Th' occasion shall instruct you. Shakspeare.
Would it apply well to the vehemence of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Shakspeare.

The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness and vehemency of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.

This pure cause would kindle my rapt spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize. Milton.

He hurries on his action with variety of events, and ends it in less compass than two months. This vehemence of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.

Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison.

VEHEMENT. adj. [vehement, French; vehemens, Latin.]

1. Violent; forcible.
A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehement or ponderous. Bacon.
Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Grew.

2. Ardent; eager; fervent.
By their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace. Shakspeare.
I find
In all things else delight indeed; but such
As, us'd or not, works in the mind no change, Nor vehement desire. Milton.

VEHEMENTLY. adv. [from vehement.]

1. Forcibly.
2. Pathetically; urgently.
The christian religion inculcates kindness more vehemently, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly, than any religion did before. Tillotson.

VEHICLE. n. f. [vehiculum, Latin.]

1. That in which any thing is carried.
Evil spirits might very properly appear in vehicles of flame, to terrify and surprize. Addison.

2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principle ingredient potable.
That the meat descends by one passage; the drink, or moistening vehicle, by another, is a popular tenet. Brown.

VEI

3. That by means of which any thing is conveyed.
The gaiety of a diverting word serves as a vehicle to convey the force and meaning of a thing. L'Estr.

VEIL. v. n. [velo, Latin.] See VEIL.

1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.

Her face was veil'd; yet, to my fancied sight,
Love, sweetness, goodness in her person shin'd. Milton.

It became the Jewish fashion, when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Boyle.

2. To cover; to invest.
I descry,
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heav'nly host. Milton.

3. To hide; to conceal.
Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to shew, half veil the deep intent. Pope.

VEIL. n. f. [velum, Latin.]

1. A cover to conceal the face.
To feed his fiery lustful eye,
He snatch'd the veil that hung her face before. Spenser.

The Paphian queen from that fierce battle borne,
With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,
Like terror did among the immortals breed. Waller.
The famous painter could allow no place
For private sorrow in a prince's face:
Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Waller.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
Such metaphors appear when right apply'd.
When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,
Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense. Granville.

She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame. Pope.

2. A cover; a disguise.
I will pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so meaning Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acton. Shakspeare.
Knock on my heart; for thou hast skill to find
If it sound solid, or be fill'd with wind;
And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind. Dryden.
The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over. Addison.

VEIN. n. f. [veine, French; vena, Lat.]

1. The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins; the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranes or valves; like so many half thimbles stuck to the side of the veins, with their mouths towards the heart. In the motion of the blood towards the heart, they are pressed close to the side of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves; and they being distended, stop up the channel, so that no blood can repass them. Quincy.

When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman. Shakspeare.
Horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton.

2. Hollow; cavity.
Found where casual fire
Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale,
Down to the veins of earth. Milton.
Let the glass of the prisms be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes. Newton.

3. Course of metal in the mine.
There is a vein for the silver. Job.
Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton.
It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold which the owner knows not of. Swift.

4. Tendency or turn of the mind or genius.
Invoke the muses, and improve my vein. Waller.
We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our vein. Dryden.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.
Artizans have not only their growths and perfections, but likewise their veins and times. Wotton.

6. Humour; temper.
I put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.
—I am not in the giving vein to-day. Shakspeare.
Certainly he that hath a satyrical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need to be afraid of others. Bacon.
They among themselves in pleasant vein
Stood scoffing. Milton.
Speak'st thou in earnest or in jesting vein? Dryden.
The currier struck the usurer upon the right vein. L'Estrange.

7. Continued disposition.
The vein I have had of running into speculations of this kind, upon a greater scene of trade, has cost me this present service. Temple.

8. Current; continued production.
He can open a vein of true and noble thinking. Swift.

9. Strain; quality.
My usual vein. Oldham.
10. Streak; variegation: as, the veins of the marble.

VEINED. } adj. [veineux, French; from VEINY. } vein.]

1. Full of veins.
2. Streaked; variegated.
The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs, and many of them are very finely veined. Mortimer.
Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines. Thomson.

VELLEITY. n. f. [vellèité, French; vellèitas, from velle, Latin.]

Velleity is the school-term used to signify the lowest degree of desire. Locke.
The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it; but it is that which is called by the schools an imperfect velleity, and imports no more than an idle, unoperative complacency in, and desire of the end, without any consideration of the means. South.

VELLICATION. v. a. [vellico, Latin.]
To twitch; to pluck; to act by stimulation.
Those smells are all strong, and do pull and vellicate the sense. Bacon.

VEN

Convulsions arising from something vellicating a nerve in its extremity, are not very dangerous.

Arbutnot.

VELLICATION. n. f. [vellicatio, Latin.] Twitching; stimulation.

All purges have a kind of twitching and vellication, besides the griping, which cometh of wind.

Bacon.

There must be a particular motion and vellication impress upon the nerves, else the sensation of heat will not be produced.

Watts.

VELLUM. n. f. [velin, Fr. velamen, Lat. rather vitulinum, low Latin.] The skin of a calf dressed for the writer.

The skull was very thin, yielding to the least pressure of my finger, as a piece of vellum.

Wifeman.

VELO'CITY. n. f. [velocité, Fr. velocitas, Lat.] Speed; swiftness; quick motion.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun; or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities; they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but moved in hyperbolas, or parabolas, or in ellipses, very eccentric.

Bentley.

VELVET. n. f. [veluto, Ital. villus, Lat. velours, Fr.] Silk with a short fur or pile upon it.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led, With each an oaken chaplet on his head.

Dryden.

The different ranging the superficial parts of bodies, as of velvet, watered silk, we think probably is nothing but the different refraction of their insensible parts.

Locke.

VELVET. adj.

1. Made of velvet.

This was moulded on a porringer, A velvet dish.

2. Soft; delicate.

Through the velvet leaves the wind, All unseen, 'gan passage find.

Shakspeare.

Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament As worldings do, giving thy sum of more To that which had too much. Then being alone, Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends; 'Tis right, quoth he: thus misery doth part The flux of company.

Shakspeare.

Such blessings nature pours, O'er-stock'd mankind enjoy but half her stores; In distant wilds, by human eyes unseen, She rears her flow'rs, and spreads her velvet green.

Young.

To VE'LVET. v. n. To paint velvet.

Verditure, ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the palest green that is, but good to velvet upon black in any drapery.

Peacham.

VEL'URE. n. f. [velours, Fr.] Velvet. An old word.

His horse with one girt, six times pierced, and a woman's crupper of velure, pierced with packthread.

Shakspeare.

VE'NAL. adj. [venal, Fr. venalis, Lat.]

1. Mercenary; prostitute.

This verse be thine, my friend, nor thou refuse This, from no venal or ungrateful muse.

Pope.

2. [from vein.] Contained in the veins. A technical word.

It is unreasonable to affirm, that the cool venal blood should be heated so high in the interval of two pulses.

Ray.

VENA'LITY. n. f. [venalité, Fr. from venal.] Mercenariness; prostitution.

VENA'TICK. adj. [venaticus, Lat.] Used in hunting.

Devoutly lolling in his seat;
The silver verge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side. Swift.
 2. [vergo, Lat.] The brink; the edge; the utmost border.
Would the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red hot steel to sear me to the brain? Shakespeare.
I say, and will in battle prove,
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye. Shakespeare.
You are old:
Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine. Shakespeare.
Serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same watry cloud, Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth. Milton.
Let fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul, that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all, and verge enough for more. Dryden.
Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem. Addison.
Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir
To sooth his care, and, free from noise and strife, Conduct him gently to the verge of life. Pope.
 3. In law.
Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seems to have been 12 miles round. Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and, holding it in his hand, sweareth fealty to the lord of the manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge. Cowell.
Fear not; whom we raise,
We will make fast within a hallow'd verge. Shakespeare.
- TO VERGE. v. n. [vergo, Lat.] To tend; to bend downward.

VERITABLY. adv. [from veritable.] In a true manner.

VERITY. n. f. [verité, Fr. veritas, Lat.]
1. Truth; consonance to the reality of things.

If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of religion established, let them believe God himself thus miraculously working for it.

I saw their weapons drawn; there was a noise; That's verity.

The precipitancy of disputation, and the stir and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity; its calm insinuations can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whistle among a crowd of sailors in a storm.

It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty.

2. A true assertion; a true tenet.

And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity.

Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleaseth God, of his gracious goodness, to infill that celestial verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls?

If there come truth from them, Why, by the verities on thee made good, May they not be my oracles as well?

Must virtue be preserved by a lie? Virtue and truth do ever best agree;

By this it seems to be a verity, Since the effects so good and virtuous be.

3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts.

2. The containing parts of an animal body.

Of these elements are constituted the smallest fibres; of those fibres the vessels; of those vessels the organs of the body. Arbutnot.

Another cause of a wasting ulcer in the lungs, is, the disruption of a vessel, whence the blood issues into the cavities and interstices of the lungs, and is thence expectorated by a cough. Blackmore.

3. Any vehicle in which men or goods are carried on the water.

The sons and nephews of Noah, who peopled the isles, had vessels to transport themselves. Raleigh.

The Phœnicians first invented open vessels, and the Egyptians ships with decks. Heylin.

The vessel is represented as stranded. The figure before it seems to lift it off the shallows. Addison.

From storms of rage, and dangerous rocks of pride,

Let thy strong hand this little vessel guide;
It was thy hand that made it: through the tide
Impetuous of this life let thy command
Direct my course and bring me safe to land. Prior.

Now secure the painted vessel glides;
The sun-beams trembling on the floating tides. Pope.

4. Any capacity; any thing containing.

I have my fill
Of knowledge, what this vessel can contain. Milton.

5. [In theology.] One relating to God's household.

If the rigid doctrines be found apt to cool all those men's love of God, who have not the confidence to believe themselves of the number of the few chosen vessels, and to beget security and presumption in others who have conquered those difficulties. Hammond.

To VE'SSEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a vessel; to barrel.

Take earth, and vessel it; and in that set the seed. Bacon.

VE'SSETS. n. f. A kind of cloth commonly made in Suffolk. Bailey.

VEST. n. f. [vestis, Latin.] An outer garment.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd. Milton.

When the queen in royal habit's drest,
Old mystick emblems grace th' imperial vest. Smith.

To VEST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress; to deck; to enrobe.

The verdant fields with those of heav'n may vie,
With either vested, and a purple sky. Dryden.

Light! Nature's resplendent robe;
Without whose vesting beauty all were wrapt
In gloom. Thomson.

2. To dress in a long garment.

Just Simeon and prophetic Anna spoke,
Before the altar and the vested priest. Milton.

3. To make possessor of; to invest with: it has with before the thing possessed.

To settle men's consciences, 'tis necessary that they know the person who by right is vested with power over them. Locke.

V E T

Had I been vested with the monarch's pow'r,
Thou must have sigh'd, unlucky youth! in vain. Prior.

4. To place in possession: with in before the possessor.

The militia their commissioners positively required to be entirely vested in the parliament. Clarendon.

Empire and dominion was vested in him, for the good and behoof of others. Locke.

VE'STAL. n. f. [vestalis, Lat.] A virgin consecrated to Vesta; a pure virgin.

Women are not
In their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure
The ne'er-touch'd vestal. Shakspeare.

How happy is the blameless vestal's lot!
The world forgetting, by the world forgot. Pope.

VE'STAL. adj. [vestalis, Lat.] Denoting pure virginity.

Her vestal livery is but sick and green,
And none but fools do wear it. Shakspeare.

VE'STIBULE. n. f. [vestibulam, Latin.] The porch or first entrance of a house.

VE'STIGE. n. f. [vestigium, Lat.] Footstep; mark left behind in passing.

The truth passes so slightly through men's imaginations, that they must use great subtilty to track its vestiges. Harvey.

VE'STMENT. n. f. [vestimentum, Latin.] Garment; part of dress.

Were it not better that the love which men bear unto God should make the least things that are employed in his service amiable, than that their over-scrupulous dislike of so mean a thing as a vestment, should from the very service of God withdraw their hearts and affections? Hooker.

Heaven then would seem thy image, and reflect Those fable vestments, and that bright aspect. Waller.

The sculptors could not give vestments suitable to the quality of the persons represented. Dryden.

VE'STRY. n. f. [vestiaire, Fr. vestiarium, Latin.]

1. A room appendant to the church, in which the sacerdotal garments and consecrated things are repositied.

Bold Amycus from the robb'd vestry brings
The chalices of heav'n; and holy things
Of precious weight. Dryden.

2. A parochial assembly commonly convened in the vestry.

They create new senators, vestry elders, without any commandment of the word. White.

The common-council are chosen every year, so many for every parish, by the vestry and common convention of the people of that parish. Clarendon.

Go with me where paltry constables will not summon us to vestries. Blount.

VE'STURE. n. f. [vesture, old Fr. vestura, Italian.]

1. Garment; robe.

Her breasts half hid, and half were laid to show;
Her envious vesture greedy sight repelling. Fairf.

What, weep you when you but behold
Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? Shakspeare.

To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss. Shakspeare.

Here ruddy brass and gold refulgent blaz'd;
There polish'd chests embroider'd vestures grac'd. Pope.

2. Dress; habit; external form.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings;
But this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it. Shakspeare.

Rocks, precipices, and gulfs, apparel'd with a vesture of plants, would resemble mountains and vallies. Bentley.

VETCH. n. f. [vicia, Lat.] A plant with a papilionaceous flower, producing a legume.

V E X

Where vetches, pulse, and tares have stood,
And stalks of lupines grew. Dryden.

An ervum is a sort of vetch, or small pea. Arbutnot.

VE'TCHY. adj. [from vetch.] Made of vetches; abounding in vetches; consist- of vetch or pea-straw.

If to my cottage thou wilt resort,
There may'st thou ligge in a vetchy bed,
'Till fairer fortune shew forth his head. Spenser.

VE'TERAN. n. f. [veteranus, Lat.] An old soldier; a man long practised in any thing.

The Arians, for the credit of their faction, took the eldest, the best experienced, the most wary, and the longest practised veterans they had amongst them. Hooker.

If king Charles II. had made war upon France, he might have conquered it by the many veterans which had been inured to service in the civil wars. Addison.

Ensigns that pierc'd the foe's remotest lines,
The hardy veteran with tears resigns. Addison.

We were forced to uncover, or be regarded as veterans in the beau monde. Addison.

VE'TERAN. adj. Long practised in war; long experienced.

There was a mighty strong army of land-forces, to the number of fifty thousand veteran soldiers. Bacon.

The British youth shall hail thy wise command;
Thy temper'd ardour, and thy veteran skill. Thomson.

VETERINARIAN. n. f. [veterinarius, Lat.] One skilled in the diseases of cattle.

That a horse has no gall, is not only swallowed by common farriers, but also received by good veterinarians, and some who have laudably discoursed upon horses. Brown.

To VEX. v. a. [vexo, Lat.]

1. To plague; to torment; to harass.

Do you think
The king will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd? Shakspeare.

Do poor Tom some charity, whom the foul fiend vexes. Shakspeare.

When she pressed him daily, so that his soul was vexed unto death, he told her all his heart. Judges.

Still may the dogs the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train! Dryden.

You are the cause of all my care:
Your eyes ten thousand dangers dart;
Ten thousand torments vex my heart;
I love, and I despair. Prior.

2. To disturb; to disquiet.

Alack, 'tis he; why, he was met ev'n now,
As mad as the vex'd sea, singing aloud. Shakspeare.

Rang'd on the banks, beneath our equal oars,
White curl the waves, and the vex'd ocean roars. Pope.

3. To trouble with slight provocations.

To VEX. v. n. To fret; to be on tenter- ters; to be uneasy.

Ulysses gave good care, and fed
And drunke his wine, and vex'd, and ravished
His food for mere vexation. Chapman.

VE'XATION. n. f. [from vex.]

1. The act of troubling.

O that husband,
My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated vex- ations of it! Shakspeare.

2. The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That hundred friends greet in the hour of death. Shakspeare.

Passions too violent, instead of heightening our pleasures, afford us nothing but vexation and pain. Temple.

3. The cause of trouble or uneasiness.

Your children were vexation to your youth:
But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shakspeare.

4. An act of harassing by law.

Albeit the party grieved thereby may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation. Bacon.

5. A slight teasing trouble.

VEXA'TIOUS. adj. [from vexation.]

1. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.

Consider him maintaining his usurped title by continual vexatious wars against the kings of Judah. South.

Vexatious thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;
Haunted my nights, and terrified my days;
Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursu'd my ways;
Nor shut from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.

2. Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.

He leads a vexatious life, who in his noblest actions is so gored with scruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another. Digby.

3. Teasing; slightly troublesome.

VEXA'TIOUSLY. adv. [from vexatious.]

Troublesomely; uneasily.

VEXA'TIOUSNESS. n. f. [from vexatious.]

VEX'ER. n. f. [from vex.] He who vexes.

U'GLILY. adv. [from ugly.] Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.

U'GLINESS. n. f. [from ugly.]

1. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

All that else seem'd fair and fresh in fight,
Was turned now to dreadful ugliness. Spenser.
She takes her topicks from the advantages of old age and ugliness. Dryden.

2. Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.

Their dull ribaldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the sin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.

U'GLY. adj. [This word was anciently written ougly; whence Dier ingeniously deduces it from ouphlike; that is, like an ouph, elf, or goblin. In Saxon oga is terror; and in Gothick ogan is to fear.] Deformed; offensive to the sight; contrary to beautiful; hateful.

If Cassio do remain,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me ugly. Shakspeare.

O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams. Shakspeare.
Was this the cottage, and the safe abode
Thou toldst me of? What grim aspects are these,
These ugly-headed monsters? Milton.

VIAL. n. f. [φιάλη.] A small bottle.

You gods! look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your grace
Upon my daughter's head. Shakspeare.

Take thou this vial, being then in bed,
And this distilled liquor drink thou off. Shakspeare.
Another lamp burnt in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the antient Romans inclosed in a glass vial. Wilkins.

I placed a thip vial, well stopp'd up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing followed. Addis.
Chemical waters, that are each transparent, when separate, ferment into a thick troubled liquor, when mixed in the same vial. Addison.

To VIAL. v. a. To enclose in a vial.

This she with precious vial'd liquors heals;
For which the shepherds, at the festivals,
Carol her goodness loud in rustick lays. Milton.

VIAND. n. f. [viande, French; vianda, Italian.] Food; meat dressed.

The belly only like a gulf remain'd,
I th' midst of the body idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the viand. Shakspeare.

No matter, since They've left their viands behind, for we have stomachs.

Will't please you taste of what is here? Shakspeare.

These are not fruits forbidden; no interdict
Defends the touching of these viands pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil. Milton.

From some sorts of food less pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such viands, had better to abstain. Ray.

The tables in fair order spread;
Viands of various kinds allure the taste,
Of choicest sort and savour; rich repast! Pope.

VIAT'ICUM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Provision for a journey.

2. The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.

To VI'BRATE. v. a. [vibro, Latin.]

1. To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.

2. To make to quiver.

Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not. Holder.

To VI'BRATE. v. n.

1. To play up and down, or to and fro.

The air, compressed by the fall and weight of the quicksilver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate a little up and down. Boyle.

Do not all fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light, and shine? And is not this emission performed by the vibrating motions of their parts? Newton.

2. To quiver.

The whisper that to greatness still too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear. Pope.

VIBRA'TION. n. f. [from vibro, Latin.]

The act of moving, or state of being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns; the act of quivering.

It sparkled like the coal upon the altar, with the fervours of piety, the heats of devotion, and the fallies and vibrations of an harmless activity. South.

Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? which vibrations being propagated along the solid fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, cause the sense of seeing. Newton.

Mild vibrations sooth the parted soul,
New to the dawning of celestial day. Thomson.

VI'CAR. n. f. [vicarius, Latin.]

1. The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.

Procure the vicar
To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakspeare.

Yours is the prize;
The vicar my defeat, and all the village see. Dryd.
A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spoiling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy decry'd, what a contempt must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order! Swift.

2. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.

An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Ayliffe.

VI'CARAGE. n. f. [from vicar.] The benefice of a vicar.

This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never deserted his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.

VICA'RIOUS. adj. [vicarius, Latin.]

Deputed; delegated; acting in the place
of another.

The soul in the body is but a subordinate efficient, and vicarious and instrumental in the hands of the Almighty, being but his substitute in this regiment of the body. Hale.

What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul? Norris.

VI'CARSHIP. n. f. [from vicar.] The office of a vicar.

VICE. n. f. [vitium, Latin.]

1. The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate life.

No spirit more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton.

The foundation of error will lie in wrong measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.

2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.

No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shakspeare.

Yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed. Shakspeare.

Where the excess and defect do make vices, or such things as ought not to be, there the mediocrity must denote something that ought to be, and consequently must be a virtue. Wilkins.

Ungovern'd appetite, a brutish vice. Milton.
I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

Proud views and vain desires in our worldly employments, are as truly vices and corruptions, as hypocrisy in prayer, or vanity in alms. Law.

3. The fool, or punchinello of old shows.

I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to sustain;
Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath,
Cries, Ah, ha! to the devil. Shakspeare.
His face made of brass, like a vice in a game. Tusser.

4. [vijs, Dutch.] A kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen.

He found that marbles taught him percussion;
bottle-screws, the vice; whirligigs, the axis in peri-trochio. Arbutnot and Pope.

5. Gripe; grasp.

If I but fist him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakspeare.

6. [vice, Latin.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superiour, or who has the second rank in command; as, a viceroy, vicechancellor.

To VICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To draw by a kind of violence.

With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen 't, or been an instrument
To vice you to 't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly. Shakspeare.

VICEA'DMIRAL. n. f. [vice and admi-ral.]

1. The second commander of a fleet.

The foremost of the fleet was the admiral; the rearadmiral was Cara Mahometes, an arch-pirate.
The viceadmiral in the middle of the fleet, with a great squadron of galleys, struck sail directly. Knolles.

2. A naval officer of the second rank.

The viceadmiralty is exercised by Mr. Trevanion. Carew.

VICEA'GENT. n. f. [vice and agent.]

One who acts in the place of another.
A vassal Satan hath made his viceagent, to cross whatever the faithful ought to do. Hooker.

VICECHA'NCELLOR. n. f. [vicecancellarius, Latin.] The second magistrate of the universities.

VI'CED. adj. [from vice.] Vitious; corrupt. Not used.

Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vice'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakspeare.

VICEGE'RENCY. n. f. [from vicegerent.] The office of a vicegerent; lieutenant; deputed power.

The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vicegerency and deputation under God. South.

VICEGERENT. n. f. [vicem gerens, Latin.] A lieutenant; one who is intrusted with the power of the superior, by whom he is deputed.

All precepts concerning kings are comprehended in these: remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's vicegerent. Bacon.

Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God; in unshaken duty to his vicegerent; in hearty obedience to his church. Sprat.

Great Father of the gods, when for our crimes Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times; Some tyrant king, the terror of his age, The type and true vicegerent of thy rage, Thus punish. Dryden.

VICEGERENT. adj. [vicegerens, Latin.] Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.

Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee, Vicegerent Son! To thee I have transferr'd All judgment, whether in heav'n, or earth, or hell. Milton.

VI'CENTARY. adj. [vicenarius, Latin.] Belonging to twenty. Bailey.

VICEROY. n. f. [viceroi, French.] He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.

Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd, Detract so much from that prerogative, As to be call'd but viceroi of the whole? Shaksp.

Mendoza, viceroi of Peru, was wont to say, that the government of Peru was the best place the king of Spain gave, save that it was somewhat too near Madrid. Bacon.

We are so far from having a king, that even the viceroi is generally absent four fifths of his time. Swift.

VICEROYALTY. n. f. [from viceroi.] Dignity of a viceroi.

These parts furnish our viceroialties for the grandees; but in war are incumbrances to the kingdom. Addison.

VI'CETY. n. f. [Of this word I know not well the meaning or original: a nice thing is now called in vulgar language, point vice, from the French point de vice, or point de vice; whence the barbarous word vicety may be derived.] Nicety; exactness. A word not used.

Here is to the fruit of Pem, Grafted upon Stub his stem; With the peakish nicety, And old Sherewood's vicety. Ben Jonson.

VI'CINAGE. n. f. [vicinia, Lat.] Neighbourhood; places adjoining.

VICI'NAL. } adj. [vicinus, Latin.] Near; VICI'NE. } neighbouring.

Opening other vicine passages might obliterate any track; as the making of one hole in the yielding mud defaces the print of another near it. Glanville.

VICI'NITY. n. f. [vicinus, Latin.]

1. Nearness; state of being near. The position of things is such, that there is a vicinity between agents and patients, that the one incessantly invades the other. Hale.

The abundance and vicinity of country seats. Swift.

2. Neighbourhood. He shall find out and recall the wandering particles home, and fix them in their old vicinity. Rogers.

Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun. Bentley.

VI'CI'OUS. adj. [from vice.] See VI'CI'OUS. Devoted to vice; not addicted to virtue.

He heard this heavy curse, Servants of servants, on his vicious race. Milton.

VICI'SSITUDE. n. f. [vicissitudo, Latin.]

1. Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.

It makes through heav'n Grateful vicissitude, like day and night. Milton.

The rays of light are alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.

This succession of things upon the earth, is the result of the vicissitude of seasons, and is as constant as is the cause of that vicissitude, the sun's declination. Woodward.

2. Revolution; change.

During the course of the war, did the vicissitude of good and bad fortune affect us with humility or thankfulness. Atterbury.

Verse sweetens toil, however rude the sound. All at her work the village maiden sings;

Nor, as she turns the giddy wheel around, Revolves the sad vicissitude of things. Giffard.

VI'CONTIELS. In law, vicontiel rents are certain farms for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them. Vicontiel writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff. Bailey.

VI'CTIM. n. f. [vicima, Latin.]

1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.

All that were authors of so black a deed, Be sacrific'd as vicims to his ghost. Denham.

And on the vicim pour the ruddy wine. Dryd.

Clitumnus' waves, for triumphs after war, The vicim ox, and snowy sheep prepare. Addison.

2. Something destroyed.

Behold where age's wretched vicim lies; See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes. Prior.

VI'CTOR. n. f. [vicior, Latin.]

1. Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains the advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive; we say the conqueror of kingdoms, not the vicior of kingdoms; and never but with regard to some single action or person: as we never say, Cæsar was in general a great vicior, but that he was vicior at Pharsalia. We rarely say Alexander was vicior of Darius, though we say he was vicior at Arbela; but we never say he was vicior of Persia.

This strange race more strange conceits did yield; Who vicior seem'd, was to his ruin brought;

Who seem'd o'erthrown, was mistress of the field. Sidney.

Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind, Both tugging to be *vicior*s, breast to breast,

Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Shakspere.

Although the vicior, we submit to Cæsar. Shakspere.

Say where and when Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the vicior's heel. Milton.

Our Hebrew songs and harps in Babylon, That pleas'd so well our vicior's ear, declare That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd. Milton.

Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume, And now the *vicior*s fall. Denham.

In love, the *vicior*s from the vanquish'd fly; They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.

Fortune's unjust; she ruins oft the brave, And him who should be vicior, makes the slave. Dryden.

Lose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger; Heaven will not leave me in the vicior's hand. Addison.

2. Pope has used this word in a manner perhaps unauthorized.

There, vicior of his health, his fortune, friends, And fame, this lord of useless thousands ends. Pope.

VICTO'RIOUS. adj. [viciorieux, French.]

1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superior in contest.

Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquish'd, than by the valour of the viciorious. Hayward.

The Son return'd viciorious with his saints. Milton.

That happy sun, said he, will rise again, Who twice viciorious did our navy see:

And I alone must view him rise in vain, Without one ray of all his star for me. Dryden.

2. Producing conquest.

Sudden these honours shall be snatch'd away, And curst for ever this viciorious day. Pope.

3. Betokening conquest.

Now are our brows bound with viciorious wreaths; Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shaksp.

VICTO'RIOUSLY. adv. [from viciorious.]

With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.

That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, vicioriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

VICTO'RIOUSNESS. n. f. [from viciorious.]

The state or quality of being viciorious.

VICTORY. n. f. [vicioria, Latin.]

Conquest; success in contest; triumph.

At his nurse's tears He whin'd and roar'd away your vicior,

That pages blush'd at him. Shakspere.

Then to the heaven of heavens he shall ascend, With vicior, triumphing o'er his foes. Milton.

Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience.

It is an act of humility, of mortification, and self-denial, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a vicior over the most refractory passions. Taylor.

VI'CTRESS. n. f. [from vicior.] A female that conquers. Not used.

I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed; And she shall be sole vicior; Cæsar's Cæsar. Shakspere.

VI'CTUAL. } n. f. [vicuailles, French;

VI'CTUALS. } vittonaglia, Italian.]

Provision of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance. Chapman has written it as it is colloquially pronounced.

He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with vicuails and fresh water. Abbot.

You had musty vicuails, and he hath help to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach. Shakspere.

A huge great flagon full I bore, And, in a good large knapsack, vicuils store. Chapman.

Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? Shaksp.
In this their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilancy, and voluntary hazard of his person. Wotton.

Of these the vigilance
I dread; and to elude, thus wrapp'd in mist
Of midnight vapour, glide obscure. Milton.

V I L

We are enabled to subdue all other creatures; and use for our behoof the strength of the ox, the sagacity and vigilancy of the dog. Ray.

3. Guard; watch.

No post is free, no place,
That guard and most unusual vigilance
Does not attend my taking. Shaksp.
In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from heav'n. Milton.

VIGILANT. adj. [vigilans, Lat.] Watchful; circumspect; diligent; attentive.

They have many prayers, but every of them very short, as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.

Take your places, and be vigilant:

If any noise or soldier you perceive,
Let us have knowledge. Shaksp.
The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration so soon, that he procured the king to send a message to the master of the rolls. Clarendon.

VIGILANTLY. adj. [from vigilant.] Watchfully; attentively; circumspectly.

Thus in peace, either of the kings so vigilantly observed every motion of the others, as if they had lived upon the alarm. Hayward.

3. Energy; efficacy.

In the fruitful earth
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.

How does Cartesius all his sinews strain,
The earth's attractive vigour to explain! Blackmore.

VILE. adj. [vil, Fr. vilis, Latin.]

1. Base; mean; worthless; sordid; despicable.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God, were in his sight so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.

I disdain scorn'd, and craved death,
Rather than I would be so vile esteemed. Shaksp.
He to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother; 'be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition. Shaksp.
O ye Pegasian nymphs, that, hating viler things, Delight in lofty hills, and in delicious springs!

The inhabitants account gold but as a vile thing
Drayton.
Abbot.

That sinful creature man elected is,
And in our place the heavens possess he must;
Vile man, begot of clay, and born of dust.

A spontaneous production is against matter of fact;
a thing without example not only in man, but the vilest of weeds. Fairfax.
Bentley.

2. Morally impure; wicked.

Restor'd by thee, vile as I am, to place
Of new acceptance. Milton.

VILED. adj. [from vile; whence revile.]

He granted life to all except to one, who had used viled speeches against king Edward. Hayward.

VILELY. adv. [from vile.] Basely;
meanly; shamefully.

The Volscians vilely yielded the town. Shaksp.
How can I

Forget my Hector, treated with dishonour, Depriv'd of funeral rites, and vilely dragg'd,
A bloody corse, about the walls of Troy? A. Phillips.

VILENESS. n. f. [from vile.]

1. Baseness; meanness; despicableness.

His vileness us shall never awe:
But here our sports shall be,
Such as the golden world first saw,
Most innocent and free. Drayton.

Reflect on the essential vileness of matter, and its impotence to conserve its own being. Creech.

Considering the vileness of the clay, I wondered that no tribune of that age durst ever venture to ask the potter, What dost thou make? Swift.

2. Moral or intellectual baseness.

Then, vileness of mankind!
Could none, alas! repeat me good or great,
Wash my pale body, or bewail my fate? Prior.

VILIFIER. n. f. [from vilify.] One that vilifies.

To VILIFY. v. a. [from vile.]

1. To debase; to degrade; to make vile.

Their maker's image
Forsook them, when themselves they vilify'd
To serve ungovern'd appetite, and took His image whom they serv'd. Milton.

2. To defame; to make contemptible.

Tomalin could not abide
To hear his sovereign vilify'd. Drayton.
The displeasure of their prince, those may expect, who would put in practice all methods to vilify his person. Addison.

Many passions dispose us to depress and vilify the merit of one rising in the esteem of mankind. Addison.

VILL. n. f. [ville, Fr. villa, Lat.] A village; a small collection of houses. Little in use.

This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor, town, or vill. Hale.

VILLA. n. f. [villa, Lat.] A country seat.

The antient Romans lay the foundations of their villa and palaces within the very borders of the sea.
Addison.

At six hours distance from Bizantium's walls,
Where Bosphorus into the Euxine falls,
In a gay district, call'd th' Elysian vale,
A furnish'd villa stands, propos'd for sale. Harte.

All vast possessions; just the same the case,
Whether you call them villa, park, or chase. Pope.

VILLAGE. n. f. [village, Fr.] A small collection of houses in the country, less than a town.

Beggars, with roaring voices, from low farms,
Or pelting villages, sheep coats, and mills,
Inforce their charity. Shaksp.

The early village cock
Hath twice done salutation to the morn. Shaksp.

You have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so; but, like the village curs,
Bark when their fellows do. Shaksp.

The country villages were burnt down to the ground. Knolles.

Those village-words give us a mean idea of the thing. Dryden.

Seam'd o'er with wounds which his own sabre gave,

In the vile habit of a village slave. Pope.

VILLAGER. n. f. [from village.] An inhabitant of the village.

Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under such hard conditions. Shaksp.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country geer. Milton.

If there are conveniencies of life, which common use reaches not, it is not reason to reject them, because every villager doth not know them. Locke.

VILLAGERY. n. f. [from village.] District of villages.

Robin Goodfellow, are you not he
That fright the maidens of the villagery? Shaksp.

VILLAIN. n. f. [vilain, Fr. villanus, low
Latin.]

1. One who held by a base tenure.

The Irish inhabiting the lands fully conquered, being in condition of slaves and villains, did render a greater revenue than if they had been made the king's free subjects. Davies.

2. A wicked wretch.

We were prevented by a dozen armed knights, or rather villains, who, using this time of their extreme feebleness, all together set upon them. Sidney.

O villain! villain! his very opinion in the letter.
Abhorred villain! unnatural, detested, brutish villain! Shaksp.

What in the world,
That names me traitor, villain-like he lies. Shaksp.

He was stabbed to the heart by the hand of a villain, upon the mere impious pretence of his being odious to the parliament. Clarendon.

Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix;
Of crooked counsels, and dark politicks. Pope.

VILLANAGE. n. f. [from villain.]

1. The state of a villain; base servitude.

They exercise most bitter tyranny
Upon the parts brought into their bondage:
No wretchedness is like to sinful villanage. Spenser.

Upon every such surrender and grant, there was but one freeholder, which was the lord himself; all the rest were but tenants in villanage, and were not fit to be sworn in juries. Davies.

2. Baseness; infamy.

If in thy smoke it ends, their glories shine;
But infamy and villanage are thine. Dryden.

To VILLANIZE. v. a. [from villain.] To debase; to degrade; to defame.

Were virtue by descent, a noble name
Could never villanize his father's fame;
But, as the first, the last of all the line,
Would, like the sun, ev'n in descending shine. Dryden.

These are the fools, whose solidity can baffle all arguments; whose glory is in their shame, in the debasing and villanizing of mankind to the condition of beasts. Bentley.

VILLANOUS. adj. [from villain.]

1. Base; vile; wicked.

2. Sorry; in a familiar sense.

Thou art my son; I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly a villanous trick of thine eye doth warrant me. Shaksp.

3. It is used by Shakspere to exaggerate any thing detestable.

We shall lose our time,
And all be turn'd to barnacles or apes,
With foreheads villanous low. Shaksp.

VILLANOUSLY. adv. [from villanous.]

Wickedly; basely.

The wandering Numidian falsified his faith, and villanously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself. Knolles.

VILLANOUSNESS. n. f. [from villanous.]
Baseness; wickedness.

VILLANY. n. f. [from villain; villannie, old French.]

1. Wickedness; baseness; depravity; gross atrociousness.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such a rheum:

And he, long traded in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shaksp.

He is the prince's jester; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany. Shaksp.

2. A wicked action; a crime. In this sense it has a plural.

No villany, no flagitious action was ever yet committed, but a lie was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

Such villanies rous'd Horace into wrath;
And 'tis more noble to pursue his path,
Than an old tale. Dryden.

VILLATICK. adj. [villaticus, Lat.] Belonging to villages.

Evening dragon came,
Assailant on the perched roofs,

And nests in order rang'd,
Of tame villatick fowl. Milton.

VILLI. n. f. [Lat.] In anatomy, are the fame as fibres; and in botany, small hairs like the grain of plush or shag,

with which, as a kind of excrescence,
some trees do abound. Quincy.

VILLOUS. adj. [villosus, Lat.] Shaggy;
rough; furry.

The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villous coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger. Arbutnot.

VIMINEOUS. adj. [vimineus, Lat.] Made of twigs.

As in the hive's vimineous dome
Ten thousand bees enjoy their home;

Each does her studious action vary,
To go and come, to fetch and carry. Prior.

VINCIBLE. adj. [from vinco, Latin.]
Conquerable; superable.

He not vincible in spirit, and well assured that shortness of provision would in a short time draw the seditious to shorter limits, drew his sword. Hayward.

Because 'twas absolutely in my power to have attended more heedfully, there was liberty in the principle, the mistake which influenced the action was vincible. Norris.

VINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from vincible.]
Liableness to be overcome. Di.

VINCTURE. n. f. [vinctura, Lat.] A binding. Bailey.

Now vindemiate, and take your bees towards the expiration of this month. Evelyn.

VINDEMIATION. n. f. [vindemia, Lat.]
Grape-gathering. Bailey.

To VINDICATE. v. a. [vindico, Lat.]

1. To justify; to support; to maintain.

Where the respondent denies any proposition, the opponent must directly vindicate and confirm that proposition; i. e. he must make that proposition the conclusion of his next syllogism. Watts.

2. To revenge; to avenge.

We ought to have added, how far an holy war is to be pursued; whether to enforce a new belief, and to vindicate or punish infidelity. Barnes.

Man is not more inclinable to obey God than man; but God is more powerful to exact subjection, and to vindicate rebellion. Pease.

The more numerous the offenders are, the more his justice is concerned to vindicate the affront. Tillotson.

Assemble ours, and all the Theban race,
To vindicate on Athens thy disgrace. Dryden.

VIN

3. To assert; to claim with efficacy.

Never any touch'd upon this way, which our poet justly has vindicated to himself. Dryden.

The beauty of this town, without a fleet,
From all the world shall vindicate her trade.

Dryden.

4. To clear; to protect from censure.

God's ways of dealing with us are by proposition of terrors and promises. To these is added the authority of the commander, vindicated from our neglect by the interposition of the greatest signs and wonders, in the hands of his prophets, and of his Son.

Hammond.

I may assert eternal providence,
And vindicate the ways of God to man.

Milton.

VINDICATION. n. f. [vindication, Fr. from vindicare.] Defence; assertion; justification.

This is no vindication of her conduct. She still acts a mean part, and, through fear, becomes an accomplice in endeavouring to betray the Greeks.

Broom.

VINDICATIVE. adj. [from vindicare.] Revengeful; given to revenge.

He, in heat of action,

Is more vindicative than jealous love. Shakspeare.

Publick revenges are for the most part fortunate; but in private revenges it is not so. Vindicative persons live the life of witches, who, as they are mischievous, so end they unfortunate. Bacon.

The fruits of aduſted choler, and the evaporations of a vindicative spirit.

Howel.

Do not too many believe no zeal to be ſpiritual, but what is cenſorious or vindicative? whereas no zeal is ſpiritual, that is not alſo charitable. Sprat.

Distinguish betwixt a paſſion purely vindicative, and thoſe counſels where divine juſtice avenges the innocent.

L'Eſtrange.

VINDICATOR. n. f. [from vindicare.] One who vindicates; an aſſertor.

He treats tyranny, and the vices attending it, with the utmoſt rigour; and conſequently a noble ſoul is better pleaſed with a jealous vindicator of Roman liberty, than with a temporizing poet.

Dryden.

VINDICATORY. adj. [from vindicator.]

1. Punitory; performing the office of vengeance.

The afflictions of Job were no vindicatory puniſhments to take vengeance of his ſins, but probatory chaſtiſements to make trial of his graces. Bramhall.

2. Defensory; justificatory.

VINDICTIVE. adj. [from vindicta, Lat.]

Given to revenge; revengeful.

I am vindictive enough to repel force by force.

Dryden.

Augustus was of a nature too vindictive, to have contented himſelf with ſo ſmall a revenge. Dryden.

Suits are not reparative, but vindictive, when they are commenced againſt inſolvent perſons.

Kettlewell.

VINE. n. f. [vinea, Lat.] The plant that bears the grape.

The flower conſiſts of many leaves placed in a regular order, and expanding in form of a roſe: the ovary, which is ſituated in the bottom of the flower, becomes a round fruit, full of juice, and contains many ſmall ſtones in each. V I S

VI'SIBLENESS. n. f. [from visible.] State or quality of being visible.

VI'SIBLY. adv. [from visible.] In a manner perceptible by the eye.

The day being visibly governed by the sun, is a little longer than the revolution of the equator; so much as is occasioned by the advance of the sun in his annual contrary motion along the ecliptick. Holder.

By the head we make known more visibly our supplications, our threatenings: enough to see the face, and to understand the mind at half a word. Dryden.

VI'SION. n. f. [vision, Fr. visio, Lat.]

1. Sight; the faculty of seeing.

Anatomists, when they have taken off from the bottom of the eye that outward and most thick coat called the dura mater, can then see through the thinner coats, the pictures of objects lively painted thereon. And these pictures, propagated by motion along the fibres of the optick nerves into the brain, are the cause of vision. Newton.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refractions. Newton.

2. The act of seeing.

Vision in the next life is the perfecting of faith in this; or faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Hammond.

3. A supernatural appearance; a spectre; a phantom.

The day seems long, but night is odious; No sleep, but dreams; no dreams, but visions strange. Sidney.

Last night the very gods shew'd me a vision. Shakspeare.

The uliginous lacteous matter taken notice of in the coral fishings upon the coast of Italy, was only a collection of the coralline particles. Woodward.

ULTIMATE. adj. [ultimus, Latin.] Intended in the last resort; being the last in the train of consequences.

I would be at the worst; worst is my port,
My harbour, and my ultimate repose. Milton.

Many actions apt to procure fame, are not conducive to this our ultimate happiness. Addison.

The ultimate allotment of God to men, is really a consequence of their own voluntary choice, in doing good or evil. Rogers.

ULTIMATELY. adv. [from ultimate.]
In the last consequence.

Charity is more extensive than either of the two other graces, which center ultimately in ourselves; for we believe, and we hope for our own sakes; but love, which is a more disinterested principle, carries us out of ourselves, into desires and endeavours of promoting the interests of other beings. Atterbury.

Trust in our own powers ultimately terminates in the friendship of other men, which these advantages affure to us. Rogers.

ULTI'MITY. n. f. [ultimus, Latin.] The last stage; the last consequence. A word very convenient, but not in use.

U M B

UMBE'LLATED. adj. In botany, is said of flowers when many of them grow together in umbels. Diæ.

UMBELLI'FEROUS. adj. [umbel and fero, Latin.] In botany, being a plant that bears many flowers, growing upon many footstalks, proceeding from the same centre; and chiefly appropriated to such plants whose flowers are composed of five leaves, as fennel and parsnip. Diæ.

U'MBER. n. f.
1. Umbel is a sad colour; which grind with gum water, and lighten it with a little ceruse, and a shive of saffron.
Peacham.

I'll put myself in poor and mean attire,
And with a kind of umber smirch my face. Shakspeare.
Umbre is very sensible and earthy; there is nothing but pure black which can dispute with it. Dryden.
The umbres, ochres, and minerals found in the fissures, are much finer than those found in the strata. Woodward.

2. A fish. [thymallus, Latin.]
The umber and grayling differ as the herring and pilcher do: but though they may do so in other nations, those in England differ nothing but in their names. Walton.

U'MBERED. adj. [from umber or umbra, Latin.] Shaded; clouded.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of
night,
Fire answers fire; and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face. Shakspeare.

UMBILICAL. adj. [umbilicale, French; from umbilicus, Latin.] Belonging to the navel.

Birds are nourished by umbilical veins, and the navel is manifest a day or two after exclusion.
Brown.

In a calf, the umbilical vessels terminate in certain bodies divided into a multitude of carneous papillæ, received into so many sockets of the cotyle-dons growing on the womb. Ray.

Close as the Macedonian phalanx;
Or like the umbo of the Romans,
Which fiercest foes could break by no means. Swift.

U'MBRAGE. n. f. [ombrage, French.]
1. Shade; screen of trees.

U M P

O, might I here
In solitude live savage; in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening! Milton.

Men swelt'ring run
To grots and caves, and the cool umbrage seek
Of woven arborets. Philips.

2. Shadow; appearance.

The rest are umbrages quickly dispelled; the astrologer subjects liberty to the motions of heaven.
Bramhall against Hobbes.

The opinion carries no shew of truth nor umbrage of reason of its side. Woodward.

Such a removal of the metal out of one part of the mass, and collecting of it in another, has misled some, and given umbrage to an opinion, that there is a growth of metal in ore exposed to the air.
Woodward.

3. Resentment; offence; suspicion of in- jury.

Although he went on with the war, yet it should be but with his sword in his hand, to bend the stiffness of the other party to accept of peace; and so the king should take no umbrage of his arming and prosecution. Bacon.

UMBRA'GEOUS. adj. [umbragieux, Fr.]
Shady; yielding shade.

Umbrageous grots, and caves of cool recess.
Milton.

Walk daily in a pleasant, airy, and umbrageous garden. Harvey.

tration; friendly decision of a controversy.

U'MPIRE. n. f. [This word Minsbew, with great applause from Skinner, derives from un pere, French, a father.] An arbitrator; one who, as a common friend, decides disputes. It is by Brown taken simply for a judge, in a sense not usual.

Give me some present counsel; or, behold,
'Twixt my extremes and me, this bloody knife Shall play the umpire; arbitrating that,
Which the commission of thy years and art
Could to no issue of true honour bring. Shakspeare.
Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence.
Shakspeare.

But as swayne unkent fed on the plaines,
And made the echo umpire of my strains. Brown.

The learned Sennertus, in that book, takes not upon him to play the advocate for the chymists, but the umpire betwixt them and the peripateticks.
Boyle.

The vast distance that sin had put between the offending creature and the offended Creator, required the help of some great umpire and intercessor, to open him a new way of access to God; and this Christ did for us as mediator. South.

The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause So far from their own will as from the laws, You for their umpire and their synod take. Dryden.

Among those persons, going to law was utterly a fault, being ordinarily on such accounts as were too light for the hearing of courts and umpires. Kettlewell.

UN. A Saxon privative or negative particle answering to in of the Latins, and an of the Greeks, on, Dutch. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs. All the instances of this kind of composition cannot therefore be inserted; but I have collected a number sufficient, perhaps more than sufficient, to explain it.

The examples however, though numerous, might have easily been made more; for almost every adjective has a substantive and an adverb adhering to it, as unfaithful, unfaithfulness, unfaithfully. Un is prefixed to adjectives with their derivatives, as unapt, unaptness, unaptly; and to passive participles, as unburt, unburt; unfavoured, unfavoured: it is prefixed likewise to participial adjectives, as unpleasing, unpleasing, but rarely in the verbal sense expressing action; we cannot say, the dart flew unwounding, though we say, the man escaped unwounded. In and un may be thus distinguished: To words merely English we prefix un, as unfit; to words borrowed in the positive sense, but made negative by ourselves, we prefix un, as generous, ungenerous. When we borrow both words, we retain the Latin or French in, as elegant, inelegant; politic, impolitic. Before substantives, if they have the English termination ness, it is proper to prefix un, as unfitness; ungraciousness: If they have the Latin or French terminations in tude, ice, or ence, and for the most part if they end in ty, the negative in is put before them, as unapt, unaptness, inaptitude; unjust, injustice; imprudence; unfaithful, unfaithfulness, infidelity.

UNABASHED. adj. [from abashed.] Not shamed; not confused by modesty.

UNA'BLE. adj. [from able.]

1. Not having ability. With to before a verb, and for before a noun.

The Amalekites set on them, supposing that they had been weary, and unable to resist. Raleigh.

Zeal mov'd thee:
To please thy gods thou didst it; gods unable T'acquit themselves, and prosecute their foes.

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gaz'd on the fair,
And sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again. Dryden.

I intended to put it in practice, though far unable for the attempt of such a poem. Dryden.

Man, under the disadvantages of a weak and fallen nature, was unable even to form an idea of happiness worthy his reasonable ambition. Rogers.

2. Weak; impotent.

A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable;
Beyond all manner of so much I love you. Shaksp.

UNABOLISHED. adj. [from abolished.]

The number of needless laws unabolished, doth weaken the force of them that are necessary. Hooker.

UNACCEPTABLE. adj. [from acceptable.]

Not pleasing; not such as is well received.

The marquis at that time was very unacceptable to his countrymen. Clarendon.

'Tis as indecent as unacceptable; and all men are willing to sink out of such company, the sober for the hazards, and the jovial for the unpleasantness.

Government of the Tongue.

Every method for deterring others from the like practices for the future, must be unacceptable and displeasing to the friends of the guilty. Addison.

If he shrinks from an unacceptable duty, there is a secret reserve of infidelity at the bottom. Rogers.

UNACCEPTABLENESS. n. s. [from unacceptable.] State of not pleasing.

This alteration arises from the unacceptableness of the subject I am upon. Collier.

UNACCEPTED. adj. [from accepted.] Not accepted.

By turns put on the suppliant, and the lord;
Offer'd again the unaccepted wreath,
And choice of happy love, or instant death. Prior.

UNACCE'SSIBLENESS. n. s. [from accessibility.] State of not being to be attained or approached.

Many excellent things are in nature, which, by reason of the remoteness from us, and unaccessibility to them, are not within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

UNACCOMMODATED. adj. [from accommodated.] Unfurnished with external convenience.

Unaccommodated man is no more than such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Shakspere.

UNACCOMPANIED. adj. [from accompanied.] Not attended.

Seldom one accident, prosperous or adverse, cometh unaccompanied with the like. Hayward.

UNACCOMPLISHED. adj. [from accomplished.] Unfinished; incomplete.

What is yet more unaccountable, would he complain of their resisting his omnipotence. Rogers.

The Chinese are an unaccountable people, strangely compounded of knowledge and ignorance. Bacon.

The manner whereby the soul and body are united, and how they are distinguished, is wholly unaccountable to us. Swift.

2. Not subject; not controlled.

UNACCO'UNTABLY. adv. Strangely.

The boy proved to be the son of the merchant, whose heart had so unaccountably melted at the sight of him. Addison.

UNACCURATE. adj. [from accurate.] Not exact.

Galileo using an unaccurate way, defined the air to be in weight to water but as one to four hundred. Boyle.

UNACCURATENESS. n. s. [from unaccurate.] Want of exactness. For this are commonly used inaccurate and inaccuracy.

It may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccurateness and unconcludingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly to be relied on. Boyle.

UNACCU'STOMED. adj. [from accustomed.]

1. Not used; not habituated: with to.

I was chastised as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke. Jeremiab.

The necessity of air to the most of animals unaccustomed to the want of it, may best be judged of by the following experiments. Boyle.

2. New; not usual.

I'll send one to Mantua,
Where that same banish'd runaway doth live,

Shall give him such an unaccustom'd dram,
That he shall soon keep Tibalt company. Shaksp.

Their pristine worth
The Britons recollect, and gladly change

Sweet native home, for unaccustom'd air. Philips.

An old word ought never to be fixed to an unaccustom'd idea, without just and evident necessity. Watts.

UNACKNO'WLEDGED. adj. [from acknowledged.] Not owned.

The fear of what was to come from an unknown, at least an unacknowledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity. Clarendon.

UNACQUA'INTANCE. n. s. [from acquaintance.] Want of familiarity; want of knowledge: followed by with.

by the unadvised forwardness of divers chief counsellors, in making sudden and unreasonable alterations. Hayward.

Specifick conformities can be no unadvised productions; but are regulated by the immediate efficiency of some knowing agent. Glanville.

UNADVISEDLY. adv. Imprudently;
rashly; indiscreetly.

A strange kind of speech unto christian ears; and such as, I hope, they themselves do acknowledge unadvisedly uttered. Hooker.

What man's wit is there able to sound the depth of those dangerous and fearful evils, whereinto our weak and impotent nature is inclinable to sink itself, rather than to shew an acknowledgment of error in that which once we have unadvisedly taken upon us to defend, against the stream of a contrary publick resolution? Hooker.

What is done cannot be now amended;
Men shall deal unadvisedly sometimes,
Which after-hours give leisure to repent of. Shaksp.

A word unadvisedly spoken on the one side, or misunderstood on the other, has rais'd such an aversion to him, as in time has produced a perfect hatred of him. South.

UNADULTERATED. adj. Genuine; not

UNANSWERABLE. adj. Not to be refuted.

This is a manifest and unanswerable argument. Raleigh.

I shall not conclude it false, though I think the emergent difficulties, which are its attendants, unanswerable. Glanville.

The pye's question was wisely let fall without a reply, to intimate that it was unanswerable. L'Estrange.

These speculations are strong intimations, not only of the excellency of a human soul, but of its independence on the body; and if they do not prove, do at least confirm, these two great points, which are established by many other reasons that are unanswerable. Spektor.

As to the excuse drawn from the demands of creditors, if it be real, it is unanswerable. Atterbury.

UNANSWERABLY. adv. Beyond confutation.

It will put their little logick hard to it, to prove, that there can be any obedience where there is no command. And therefore it unanswerably follows, that the abettors of the forementioned principle plead conscience in a direct and bare-faced contradiction to God's express command. South.

UNANSWERED. adj.

1. Not opposed by a reply.
Unanswer'd lest thou boast. Milton.
Must I tamely bear
This arrogance unanswer'd? Thou 'rt a traitor. Addison

2. Not confuted.

All these reasons, they say, have been brought, and were hitherto never answered; besides a number of merriments and jests unanswered likewise.

3. Not suitably returned.

Quench, Corydon, thy long unanswer'd fire;
Mind what the common wants of life require. Dryden.

UNAPPALLED. adj. Not daunted; not impressed by fear.

If my memory must thus be thrall'd
To that strange stroke, which conquer'd all my senses;
Can thoughts still thinking so rest unappall'd? Sidney.

Infernal ghosts
Environ'd thee; some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd;
Some bent at thee their fiery darts; while thou Sat'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace. Milton.
As a lion, unappall'd with fear,
Springs on the toils, and rushes on the spear. Dryden.

Does this appear like guilt, when thus serene,
With eyes erect, and visage unappall'd,
Fixt on that awful face, I stand the charge;
Amaz'd, not fearing? Smith.

UNAPPARELLED. adj. Not dressed; not clothed.

In Peru, though they were an unapparelled people, and had some customs very barbarous, yet the government of the Incas had many parts of civility. Bacon.
Till our souls be unapparelled. Donne.

UNAPPARENT. adj. Obscure; not visible.

Thy potent voice he hears,
And longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

UNAPPEASABLE. adj. Not to be pacified; implacable.

The unappeasable rage of Hildebrand and his successors never left persecuting him, by raising one rebellion upon another. Raleigh.
I see thou art implacable; more deaf
To pray'rs than winds to seas; yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and seas to shore.
Thy anger, unappeasable, still rages,
Eternal tempest never to be calm'd. Milton.

UNAPPEASED. adj. Not pacified.

Sacrifice his flesh,
That so the shadows be not unappeas'd. Shakspeare.
His son forgot, his empress unappeas'd;
How soon the tyrant with new love is seiz'd! Dryden.

UNAPPLICABLE. adj. [from apply.]

Such as cannot be applied.
Gratitude, by being confined to the few, has a very narrow province to work on, being acknowledged to be unapplicable, and so consequently ineffectual to all others. Hammond.
Their beloved earl of Manchester appeared now as unapplicable to their purposes as the other. Clarendon.

The singling out, and laying in order those intermediate ideas, that demonstratively shew the equality or inequality of unapplicable quantities, has produced discoveries. Locke.

UNAPPREHENDED. adj. Not understood.

They of whom God is altogether unapprehended, are but few in number, and for grossness of wit such, that they hardly seem to hold the place of human being. Hooker.

UNAPPREHENSIVE. adj. [from apprehend.]

1. Not intelligent; not ready of conception.
The same temper of mind makes a man unapprehensive and insensible of any misery suffered by others. South.

2. Not suspecting.

UNAPPROACHED. adj. Inaccessible.
God is light,
And never but in unapproach'd light
Dwelt from eternity. Milton.

UNAPPROVED. adj. [from approve.] Not approved.

Evil into the mind
May come and go so unapproved, and leave No spot behind. Milton.

UNAPT. adj. [from apt.]

1. Dull; not apprehensive.
2. Not ready; not propense.
I am a soldier, and unapt to weep. Shakspeare.
My blood hath been too cool and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities. Shakspeare.
3. Unfit; not qualified; with to before a verb, for before a noun.

Fear doth grow from an apprehension of deity induced with irresistible power to hurt; and is, of all affections (anger excepted) the unaptest to admit any conference with reason. Hooker.
A longing after sensual pleasures is a dissolution of the spirit of a man, and makes it loose, soft and wandering, unapt for noble, wise, or spiritual employments. Taylor.

4. Improper; unfit; unsuitable.

UNAPPLY. adv. [from unapt.] Unfitly; improperly.

He swims on his back; and the shape of his back seems to favour it, being very like the bottom of a boat: nor do his hinder legs unaply resemble a pair of ears. Grew.

UNAPTNESS. n. f. [from unapt.]

1. Unfitness; unsuitableness.
Men's apparel is commonly made according to their conditions; and their conditions are often governed by their garments; for the person that is governed, is by his gown put in mind of gravity, and also restrained from lightness by the very unaptness of his weed. Spenser.

2. Dulness; want of apprehension.

That unaptness made you minister
Thus to excuse yourself. Shakspeare.

3. Unreadiness; disqualification; want of propension.

The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken, and thereby gets an unaptness or an aversion to any vigorous attempt ever after. Locke.

UNARGUED. adj. [from argue.]

1. Not disputed.
What thou bid'st,
Unargu'd I obey; so God ordains. Milton.
2. Not censured.
Not that this work liv'd in the hands of foes,
Unargu'd then, and yet hath fame from those. Ben Jonson.

TO UNA'RM. v. a. [from arm.] To disarm; to strip of armour; to deprive of arms.

Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day. Shakspeare.
Unarm me, Eros; the long day's task is done,
And we must sleep. Shakspeare.
Galen would not leave unto the world too subtle a theory of poisons; unarming thereby the malice of venomous spirits. Brown.

UNA'RMED. adj. [from unarm.] Having no armour; having no weapons.

On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shakspeare.

He all unarm'd
Shall chace thee with the terror of his voice
From thy demoniack holds, possession foul;
Thee and thy legions, yelling they shall fly,
And beg to hide them in a herd of swine. Milton.
Though unarm'd I am,
Here, without my sword or pointed lance,
Hope not, base man, unquestion'd hence to go. Dryden.

Whereas most other creatures are furnished with weapons for their defence; man is born altogether unarmed. Grew.

UNARRA'IGNED. adj. Not brought to a trial.

As lawful lord, and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarraign'd. Daniel.

UNARRA'YED. adj. Not dressed.
As if this infant world yet unarray'd,
Naked and bare, in Nature's lap were laid. Dryden.
Half unarray'd, he ran to his relief,
So hasty and so artless was his grief. Dryden.

UNARTFUL. adj.

1. Having no art, or cunning.
A cheerful sweetness in his looks he has,
And innocence unartful in his face. Dryden.
2. Wanting skill.

How unartful would it have been to have set him
In a corner, when he was to have given light and warmth to all the bodies round him! Cheyne.

UNARTFULLY. adv. In an unartful manner.
In the report, although it be not unartfully drawn, and is perfectly in the spirit of a pleader, there is no great skill required to detect the many mistakes. Swift.

UNARTIFICIALLY. adv. Contrarily to art.

Not a feather is unartificially made, misplaced, redundant, or defective. Derham.

UNASKED. adj.

1. Not courted by solicitation.
With what eagerness, what circumstance
Unask'd, thou tak'st such pains to tell me only My son's the better man. Denham.
2. Not sought by entreaty or care.
The bearded corn ensu'd
From earth unask'd, nor was that earth renew'd. Dryden.

How, or why
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lye?
Unask'd their pains, ungrateful their advice;
Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price. Dryden.

UNASPIRING. adj. Not ambitious.

To be modest and unaspiring, in honour preferring one another. Rogers.

UNASSAILABLE. adj. Exempt from assault.

In the number, I do but know one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakspeare.

UNASSAILED. adj. Not attacked; not assaulted.

As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,
It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd. Shakspeare.
I believe

That he, the supreme good, t' whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glist'ring guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton.

UNASSAYED. adj. Unattempted.

What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd
Alone, without exterior help sustain'd? Milton.

UNASSISTED. adj. Not helped.

Its victories were the victories of reason, unassisted by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness. Addison.
What unassisted reason could not discover, that

U N A

God has set clearly before us in the revelation of the gospel: a felicity equal to our most enlarged desires; a state of immortal and unchangeable glory.

Rogers.

UNASSISTING. adj. Giving no help.

With these I went, a brother of the war;
Nor idle stood, with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd: yet these I sway'd

Dryden.

UNASSUMING. adj. Not arrogant.

Unassuming worth in secret liv'd
And died neglected.

Thomson.

UNASSURED. adj.

1. Not confident.

The ensuing treatise, with a timorous and unassured countenance, adventures into your presence.

Glanville.

2. Not to be trusted.

The doubts and dangers, the delays and woes,
The feigned friends, the unassured foes,
Do make a lover's life a wretch's hell.

Spenser.

UNATONED. adj. Not expiated.

Could you afford him such a bribe as that,
A brother's blood yet unaton'd?

Roscoe.

UNATTAINABLE. adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.

Praise and prayer are God's due worship; which are unattainable by our discourse, simply considered, without the benefit of divine revelation.

Dryden.

I do not expect that men should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to: I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do.

Locke.

UNATTAINABLENESS. n. s. State of being out of reach.

Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or unattainableness of the good proposed.

Locke.

UNATTEMPTED. adj. Untried; not assayed.

He left no means unattempted of destroying his son.

Sidney.

Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, raileth on the rich.

Shakspeare.

It pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.

Milt.

Leave nothing unattempted to destroy
That perjurd race.

Denham.

Shall we be discouraged from any attempt of doing good, by the possibility of our failing in it? How many of the best things would, at this rate, have been left unattempted!

Atterbury.

UNATTEMPTED. adj.

1. Having no retinue, or attendants.

With goddess-like demeanor forth she went,
Not unattended.

Milton.

2. Having no followers.

Such unattended generals can never make a revolution in Parnassus.

Dryden.

3. Unaccompanied; forsaken.

Your constancy
Hath left you unattended.

Shakspeare.

UNATTENDING. adj. Not attending.

Ill is lost that praise,
That is address'd to unattending ears.

Milton.

Ev'ry nymph of the flood, her tresses rending,
Throws off her armlet of pearl in the main;
Neptune in anguish his charge unattending,
Vessels are found'ring, and vows are in vain.

Dryden.

UNATTENTIVE. adj. Not regarding.

Man's nature is so unattentive to good, that there can scarce be too many monitors.

Government of the Tongue.

Such things are not accompanied with show, and therefore seldom draw the eyes of the unattentive.

Tatler.

UNAVAILABLE. adj. Useless; vain with respect to any purpose.

When we have endeavoured to find out the strongest causes, wherefore they should imagine that

Vol. II.

U N A

reading is so unavailable, the most we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the scriptures dark, and the labour of reading easy.

Hooker.

UNAVAILING. adj. Useless; vain.

Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailing pity show:
'Tis popular to mourn a dying foe.

Dryden.

Supine he tumbles on the crimson sands,
Before his helpless friends and native bands,
And spreads for aid his unavailing hands.

Pope.

UNAVOIDABLE. adj.

1. Inevitable; not to be shunned.

Oppression on one side, and ambition on the other, are the unavoidable occasions of war.

Dryd.

It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions, without certain proofs of their truth.

Locke.

Single acts of transgression will, through weakness and surprize, be unavoidable to the best guarded.

Rogers.

The merits of Christ will make up the unavoidable deficiencies of our service; will prevail for pardon to our sincere repentance.

Rogers.

All sentiments of worldly grandeur vanish at that unavoidable moment which decides the destiny of men.

Clarissa.

2. Not to be missed in ratiocination.

That something is of itself, is self-evident, because we see things are; and the things that we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always, and of themselves: one of them is unavoidable.

Tilloson.

I think it unavoidable for every rational creature, that will examine his own or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal, wise being, who had no beginning.

Locke.

UNAVOIDABLENESS. n. s. Inevitability.

How can we conceive it subject to material impressions? and yet the importunity of pain, and unavoidableness of sensations, strongly persuade that we are so.

Glanville.

UNAVOIDABLY. adv. Inevitably.

The most perfect administration must unavoidably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it.

Addison.

UNAVOIDED. adj. Inevitable.

We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoided is the danger now.

Shakspeare.

Rare poems ask rare friends;
Yet satyrs, since the most of mankind be
Their unavoided subject, fewest see.

Ben Jonson.

UNAUTHORIZED. adj. Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.

To kiss in private?

Shakspeare.

An unauthorized kiss.

Shakspeare.

It is for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command.

Dryden.

UNAWARE. } adv. [from aware, or UNAWARES. } wary.]

1. Without thought; without previous meditation.

Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with.

Spenser.

It is my father's face,
Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd.

Shakspeare.

Firm we subsist; yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unaware.

Milton.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium: to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure.

Dryden.

'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopped off; one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not.

Pope.

2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.

Left destruction come upon him at unawares, and let his net that he hath hid, catch himself.

Psalms.

My hand, unawares to me, was, by the force of that endeavour it just before employed to sustain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it.

Boyle.

Though we live never so long, we are still surprized: we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect.

Wake.

3. In this sense I believe at unawares is the proper use.

He breaks at unawares upon our walks,
And, like a midnight wolf, invades the fold.

Dryd.

UNAWED. adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.

The raging and fanatic distemper of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as, being unaw'd by any guilt of their own, could have watched other men's.

Clarendon.

Unforc'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple and his soul sincere.

Dryd.

UNBACKED. adj.

1. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.

Then I beat my tabor;
At which like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,

Advanc'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt musick.

Shakspeare.

A well-wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall.

Suckling.

They flinch like unbacked fillies.

Dennis.

2. Not countenanced; not aided.

Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unback'd.

Daniel.

UNBALANCED. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.

Let earth unbalance'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky.

Pope.

UNBALLAST. } adj. Not kept steady

UNBALLASTED. } by ballast; unsteady.

They having but newly left those grammatick flats, where they struck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, do, for the most part, grow into hatred of learning.

Milton.

As at sea th' unballast vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides;
So, in the bounding chariot toss'd on high,
The youth is hurried headlong through the sky.

Addison.

UNBANDIED. adj. [from band.] Wanting a string, or band.

Your hose should be ungartered, your bonnet unbanded, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation.

Shakspeare.

TO UNBAR. v. a. [from bar.] To open, by removing the bars; to unbolt.

'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard,
If any other entrance stand unbar'd.

Denham.

These rites the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar

Dryd.

UNBARBED. adj. [from barba, Latin.] Not shaven. Out of use.

Must I go shew them my unbarbed sconce?
Must my base tongue give to my noble heart

Shakspeare.

A lie?

Shakspeare.

UNBARKED. adj. [from bark.] Decorticated; stripped of the bark.

A branch of a tree, unbarked some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown.

Bacon.

UNBASHFUL. adj. Impudent; shameless.

Nor did I with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility.

Shakspeare.

UNBATED. adj. [from bate.] Not repressed; not blunted.

Where is the horse, that doth untread again
His tedious measures with th' unbated fire

Shakspeare.

That he did pace them first?

Shakspeare.

UNBATHE. adj. [from bath.] Not wet.

Fierce Pasimond, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent;
The blade return'd unbat'd, and to the handle bent.

Dryden.

U N B

UNBATTERED. adj. Not injured by blows.

I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves: or thou, Macbeth;
Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded. Shakspeare.

To UNBAY. v. a. To set open; to free from the restraint of mounds.

I ought now to lose the reins of my affections, to unbay the current of my passion, and love on without boundary or measure. Norris.

UNBEARING. adj. Bringing no fruit.

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their head,
And grafts more happy in their stead. Dryden.

UNBEATEN. adj.

1. Not treated with blows.

His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For she had rode five miles unpur'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turned tail towards Neweaton. Bp. Corbet.

2. Not trodden.

We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand. Bacon.

If your bold muse dare tread unbeaten paths.
Rescommon.

Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky. Swift.

UNBECOMING. adj. Indecent; unsuitable; indecorous.

Here's our chief guest.—
—If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming. Shakspeare.

No thought of flight,
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argu'd fear. Milton.

I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in beasts than in mankind; and that it was unbecoming of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger. Dryden.

My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall:
I should have dy'd and not complain'd at all. Dryd.
This petulancy in conversation prevails among some of that sex, where it appears the most unbecoming and unnatural. Addison.

Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays.
Swift.

Such proceed upon debates without unbecoming warmth. Swift.

UNBECOMINGNESS. n. f. Indecency; indecorum.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault. Locke.

To UNBED. v. a. To raise from a bed.

Eels unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder. Walton.

UNBESITTING. adj. Not becoming; not suitable.

Love is full of unbesitting strains,
All wanton as a child, skipping in vain. Shakspeare.

Far be it that I should write thee sin; or blame!
Or think thee unbesitting holiest place. Milton.

He might several times have made peace with his discontented subjects, upon terms not at all unbesitting his dignity or interest; but he rather chose to sacrifice the whole alliance to his private passion. Swift.

To UNBEGE'T. v. n. To deprive of existence.

Wishes each minute he could unbegot
Those rebel sons who dare usurp his seat. Dryden.

UNBEGOT.

UNBEGOTTEN. } adj. [from begot.]

1. Eternal; without generation.

Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God? Stillfleet.

2. Not yet generated.

God omnipotent, must ring

U N B

Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot. Shakspeare.

In thy power

It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.

3. Not attaining existence.

Where a child finds his own parents his perversers, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse. South.

To UNBEGUILE. v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.

Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heaven. Donne.

Their comeliness unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused into them, by their concionatory invectives. Howel.

UNBEHELD. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.

These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
Shine not in vain. Milton.

UNBELIEF. n. f.

1. Incredulity.

'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras, and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell;
For such there be: but unbelief is blind. Milton.

I'm justly plagued by this your unbelief,
And am myself the cause of my own grief. Dryd.
Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief;
i. e. a readiness to believe or to deny every thing at first hearing. Watts.

2. Infidelity; irreligion.

Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where sound belief wanteth. Hooker.

To UNBELIEVE. v. a.

1. To discredit; not to trust.

Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go! Shakspeare.
So great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphosed into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses. Wotton.

2. Not to think real or true.

Nor less than sight and hearing could convince
Of such an unforeseen and unbelieved offence. Dryden.

UNBELIEVER. n. f. An infidel; one who believes not the scripture of God.

The ancient fathers being often constrained to shew what warrant they had so much to rely upon the scriptures, endeavoured still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judged thereof as they should. Hooker.

What endless war would jealous nations tear,
If none above did witness what they swear?
Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just,
Among themselves to find so little trust. Waller.

In the New Testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers.

He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Atterbury.

Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers; but if you would once convince profligates by topicks drawn from the view of their own quiet, reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift.

UNBELIEVING. adj. Infidel.

No pause,

No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
Smote in the rear. Philips.

This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the gentiles. Addison.

U N B

In the days of the apostle, when all who professed themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this severe censure might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers.

UNBELOVED. adj. Not loved.

Whoe'er you are, not unbellow'd by heav'n,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driven. Dryden.

To UNBEND. v. a.

1. To free from flexure.

It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Taylor.

I must be in the battle; but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit; to set at ease for a time.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his eares, Attended to the chase by all the flow'r of youth. Denham.

From those great cares when ease your soul
unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryden.

3. To relax vitiously or effeminately.

You unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things. Shakspeare.

UNBENDING. adj.

1. Not suffering flexure.

Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain, Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.

2. Not yielding; resolute.

Ye noble few, who here unbending stand Beneath life's pressures, yet a little while,
And all your woes are past. Thompson.

3. Devoted to relaxation.

Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Rosier.

UNBENEFICED. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.

More vacant pulpits would more converts make;
All would have latitude enough to take:
The rest unbenefic'd your sects maintain. Dryden.

UNBENEVOLENT. adj. Not kind.

A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit which inclines men to a fierce unbenignant behaviour. Rogers.

UNBENIGHTED. adj. Never visited by darkness.

Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbent night shone, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton.

UNBENIGN. adj. Malignant; malevolent.

To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join
In synod unbeneign. Milton.

UNBENT. adj.

1. Not strained by the string.

Apollo heard, and, conquering his disdain,
Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryden.

2. Having the bow unstrung.

Why hast thou gone so far,
To be unbent when thou hast ta'en thy stand,
Th' elected deer before thee? Shakspeare.

3. Not crushed; not subdued.

But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more opposite. Dryden.

4. Relaxed; not intent.

Be not always on affairs intent,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent:
When our mind's eyes are disengag'd and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Dryden.

UNBESIMING. adj. Unbecoming.

No emotion of passion transported me by the indignity of his carriage, to do or say any thing unbesiming myself. King Charles.

Far be the spirit of the chace from them;
Uncomely courage, unbecoming skill. Thomson.
UNBESOUGHT. adj. Not intreated.
Left heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath, unbesought, provided; and his hands
Cloath'd us unworthy; pitying while he judg'd.

UNBESTOWED. adj. Not given; not disposed of.
Milton.
He had now but one son and one daughter unbestowed. Bacon.

UNBETRAYED. adj. Not betrayed.
Many being prixy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd! Daniel.

UNBEWAILED. adj. Not lamented.
Let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Shakspeare.

TO UNBEWITCH. v. a. [from witch.]
To free from fascination.

TO UNBIASS. v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.
That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbiased give its judgment, being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.

The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are considered, gain upon sincere, unbiased d minds. Atterbury.
The truest service a private man may do his country, is by unbiasing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.

Where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Unbias'd or by favour or by spite;
Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right? Pope.

UNBIASSEDLY. adv. Without external influence; without prejudice.
I have sought the true meaning; and have unbiasedly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBI'D. } adj.
UNBIDDEN. }
1. Uninvited.

Unbidden guests
Are often welcomest when they are gone. Shaksp.

2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.
Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth Unbid. Milton.

Roses, unbid, and ev'ry fragrant flow'r,
Flew from their stalks, to strow thy nuptial bow'r.
Dryden.

Unbidden earth shall wreathing ivy bring,
And fragrant herbs, the promises of spring. Dryden.

UNBIGOTTED. adj. Free from bigotry.
Erasmus, who was an unbigotted Roman catho-lick, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him.
Addison.

TO UNBIND. v. a. [from bind.] To loose; to untie.
His own woe's author, who so bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it wilfully unbinds. Spenser.

Ye Latian dames,
If there be here, who dare maintain
My right, nor think the name of mother vain,
Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And orgies and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.

On the sixth instant it was thought fit to unbind
his head. Tatler.

TO UNBISHOP. v. a. [from bishop.] To deprive of episcopal orders.
I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbishops'd yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

UNBITTED. adj. [from bit.] Unbridled; unrestrained.
We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this love to be a sect or cyon. Shakspeare.

UNBLAMABLE. adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with a fault.
Much more could I say concerning this unblamable inequality of fines and rates. Bacon.

He lov'd his people, him they idoliz'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That, thus unblamable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden.

UNBLAMABLY. adv. Without taint of fault.
Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behaved ourselves.
I Thessalonians.

UNBLAMED. adj. Blameless; free from fault.
Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell
Long time in peace. Milton.

Unblam'd, abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this dame rever'd her prudent lord,
Who now is doom'd to moura. Pope.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach; free from deformity.
O welcome, pure-ey'd faith, white-handed hope!
Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity! Milton.

Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth. Waller.
Is none worthy to be made a wife
In all this town? Suppose her free from strife, Rich, fair, and fruitful; of unblemish'd life.
Dryden.

They appointed, out of these new converts, men of the best sense, and of the most unblemish'd lives, to preside over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Not disgraced; not injured by any soil.
There, where very desolation dwells,
She may pass on with unblemish'd majesty;
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton.

UNBLEND. adj. Not mingled.
None can boast a knowledge depure from defilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblended proportions on this side the empyreum. Glanville.

UNBLEST. adj.
1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.
It is a shameful and unblest thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.

2. Wretched; unhappy.
In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.

What is true passion, if unblest it dies?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies? Prior.

UNBLOODIED. adj. Not stained with blood.
Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak.
Shakspeare.

UNBLOODY. adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.
Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purling streams, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome bev'rage and unbloody feasts.
Dryden.

UNBLOWN. adj. Having the bud yet expanded.
Ah! my poor princess! Ah! my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets!
Shakspeare.

UNBLUNTED. adj. Not becoming obtuse.
A sword, whose weight without a blow might flay;
Able, unblunted, to cut hosts away. Cowley.

UNBODIED. adj.
1. Incorporeal; immaterial.
If we could conceive of things as angels and un-bodied spirits do, without involving them in those clouds language throws upon them, we should seldom be in danger of such mistakes as are perpetually committed. Watts.

2. Freed from the body.
She hath the bonds broke of eternal night;
Her soul unbodied of the burdénous corpse, Spenser.

All things are but alter'd, nothing dies;
And here and there th' unbody'd spirit flies. Dryden.

UNBOILED. adj. Not sodden.
A quarter of a pint of rice unboiled, will arise to a pint boiled. Bacon.

TO UNBOLT. v. a. To set open; to un-bar.
I'll call my uncle down;
He shall unbolt the gates. Shakspeare.

UNBOLTED. adj. Coarse; gross; not refined, as flower, by bolting or sifting.
I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakspeare.

UNBONNETED. adj. Wanting a hat or bonnet.
This night, wherein
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry; unbonneted he runs,
And bids what will, take all. Shakspeare.

UNBOOKISH. adj.
1. Not studious of books.
2. Not cultivated by erudition.
As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad;
And his unbookish jealousy must construe
Poor Cassio's smiles, gestures, and light behaviour, Quite in the wrong. Shakspeare.

UNBORN. adj. Not yet brought into life; future; being to come.
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming tow'rd me. Shakspeare.

The woes to come, the children yet unborn
Shall feel this day, as sharp to them as thorn. Shakspeare.

Never so much as in a thought unborn,
Did I offend you. Shakspeare.

He on the wings of cherubim
Up-listed, in paternal glory rode Far into chaos, and the world unborn. Milton.

To what wretched state reserv'd!
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n
To be thus wasted from us? Milton.

A queen, from whom
The souls of kings unborn for bodies wait. Dryden.

UNBORROWED. adj. Genuine; native; one's own.
But the luxurious father of the fold
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly sweat. Dryden.

In substances, especially those which the common and unborrow'd names of any language are applied to, some remarkable, some sensible qualities serve to distinguish one from another. Locke.

TO UNBOSOM. v. a.
1. To reveal in confidence.
I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st,
Too well, unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton.

Do we unbosom all our secrets to him, and hide nothing that passeth in the depth of our hearts from him? Atterbury.

2. To open; to disclose.
Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountains wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echoes mild. Milton.

UNBOTTOMED. adj.
1. Without bottom; bottomless.
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss. Milton.

2. Having no solid foundation; having no reliance.
This is a special act of christian hope, to be thus unbottomed of ourselves, and fastened upon God, with a full reliance, trust, and dependence on his mercy. Hammond.

UNBOUGHT. adj.
1. Obtained without money.
The unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden.

2. Not finding any purchaser.
The merchant will leave our native commodities unbought upon the hands of the farmer, rather than export them to a market which will not afford him returns with profit. Locke.

U N B

UNBO'UND. adj.

1. Loose; not tied.

2. Wanting a cover: used of books.

He that has complex ideas, without particular names for them, would be in no better case than a bookseller who had volumes that lay unbound, and without titles: which he could make known to others, only by shewing the loose sheets. Locke.

3. Preterit of unbind.

Some from their chains the faithful dogs unbound. Dryden.

UNBO'UNDED. adj.

1. Infinite; interminable.

Long were to tell what I have done;
I voyaged the unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.

The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me;
But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it. Addison.

2. Unlimited; unrestrained.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shakespeare.
He had given curiosity its full, unbounded range, and examin'd not only in contemplation, but by sensitive experiment, whatever could be good for the sons of men. Decay of Piety.

UNBO'UNDEDLY. adv. Without bounds; without limits.

So unboundedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too. Government of the Tongue.

UNBO'UNDEDNESS. n. s. Exemption from limits.

Finitude, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of properties. Cheyne.

UNBO'WED. adj. Not bent.

He knits his brow, and shews an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff, unbowed knee,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs. Shakespeare.

To UNBO'WEL. v. a. To eviscerate; to eviscerate.

In this chapter I'll unbowel the state of the question. Hakewill.

It is now become a new species of divinity, to branch out with fond distinctions our holy faith, which the pious simplicity of the first christians received to practice; not to read upon as an anatomy, unbowel and dissect to try experiments. Decay of Piety.

To UNBRA'CE. v. a.

1. To loose; to relax.

With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight embolling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Spenser.
Somewhat of mournful sure my ears does wound;
Drums unbrac'd, with soldiers' broken cries. Dryden.

Nought shall the psaltry and the harp avail,
When the quick spirits their warm march forbear,
And numbing coldness has unbrac'd the ear. Prior.

2. To make the clothes loose.

Is it physical,
To walk unbrac'd, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? Shakespeare.
Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd;
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose. Shakespeare.

UNBRE'ATHED. adj. Not exercised.

They now have toil'd their unbreath'd memories
With this same plea against our nuptials. Shaksp.

UNBRE'ATHING. adj. Unanimated.

They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Shakespeare.

UNBRE'D. adj.

U N B

1. Not instructed in civility; ill educated.

Unbred minds must be a little sent abroad.

Children learn from unbred or debauched servants, untowardly tricks. Locke.

Sure never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve.

2. Not taught: with to.

A warrior dame,
Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd. Dryden.

UNBREE'CHED. adj. Having no breeches.

Looking on my boy's face, methought I did recoil

Twenty-three years, and saw myself unbreech'd,
In my green velvet coat. Shakespeare.

UNBRI'ED. adj. Not influenced by money or gifts; not hired.

The soul gave all:
Unbri'd it gave; or, if a bribe appear,
No less than heav'n. Dryden.

To succour the distress'd;
Unbri'd by love; unterrify'd by threats. A. Phillips.

UNBRI'DLED. adj. Licentious; not restrained.

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king. Shakespeare.

To what licence
Dares thy unbridled boldness run itself? B. Jonson.
We have considered religious zeal, which transgresses in unbridled excess. Sprat.

UNBRO'KE. } adj. [from break.]
UNBRO'KEN. }

1. Not violated.

God pardon all oaths that are broke to me;
God keep all vows unbroke, are made to thee. Shakespeare.

Some married persons, even in their marriage, do please God, by preserving their faith unbroken. Taylor.

He first broke peace in heav'n, and faith, till then Unbroken. Milton.

2. Not subdued; not weakened.

From his seat the Pylian prince arose:
Two centuries already he fulfill'd;
And now began the third, unbroken yet. Dryden.
How broad his shoulders spread! by age unbroke! Pope.

3. Not tamed.

A lonely cow,
Unworn with yokes, unbroken to the plow. Addison.

UNBROTHERLIKE. } adj. Ill suiting with UNBROTHERLY, } the character of a brother.

Victor's unbrotherlike heat towards the eastern churches, fomented that difference about Easter into a schism. Decay of Piety.

UNBRU'ISED. adj. Not bruised; not hurt.

On Dardan plains,
The fresh, and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions. Shakespeare.

Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye:
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth, with unstuff'd brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shakespeare.

To UNBU'CKLE. v. a. To loose from buckles.

We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms; fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakespeare.

He that unbuckles this, till we do please
To doff't for our purpose, shall hear a storm. Shakespeare.

His starry helm unbuckled, shew'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.

All unbuckling the rich mail they wore,
Laid their bright arms along the sable shore. Pope.

To UNBUI'LD. v. a. To raze; to destroy.

This is the way to kindle, not to quench;
T' unbuild the city, and to lay all flat. Shaksp.

U N C

What will they then but unbuild?
His living temples, built by faith to stand;
Their own faith, not another's? Milton.

UNBUI'LT. adj. Not yet erected.

Built walls you shun, unbuilt you see. Dryden.

UNBURI'ED. adj. Not intended; not honoured with the rites of funeral.

Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx? Shaksp.
The moss, which groweth upon the skull of a dead man unburied, will staunch blood potently. Bacon.

Him double cares attend,
For his unburied soldiers, and his friend. Dryden.
Breathless he lies, and his unbury'd ghost,
Depriv'd of funeral rites, pollutes your host. Dryden.

The wand'ring ghosts
Of kings unbury'd on the wasted coasts. Pope.

UNBURN'D. } adj.
UNBURN'T. }

1. Not consumed; not wasted; not injured by fire.

Creon denies the rites of fun'ral fires to those,
Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his foes;
Unburn'd, unburied, on a heap they lie. Dryden.

2. Not heated with fire.

Burnt wine is more hard and astringent, than wine unburnt. Bacon.

UNBURNING. adj. Not consuming by heat.

What we have said of the unburning fire called light, streaming from the flame of a candle, may easily be applied to all other light deprived of sensible heat. Digby.

To UNBU'RDEN. v. a.

1. To rid of a load.

We'll shake all cares and business from our age, Conferring them on younger strengths; while we Unburden'd crawl tow'rd death. Shakespeare.

2. To throw off.

Sharp Buckingham unburthens with his tongue
The envious load that lies upon his heart. Shaksp.

3. To disclose what lies heavy on the mind.

From your love I have a warranty
T' unburthen all my plots and purposes,
How to get clear of all the debts I owe. Shakespeare.

To UNBU'TTON. v. a. To loose any thing buttoned.

Thou art fat-witted with drinking old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper. Shakespeare.

Many catch cold on the breast, by leaving their doublets unbuttoned. Harvey.

His silk waistcoat was unbuttoned in several places. Addison.

A saline substance, subtler than sal ammoniac, carried up with it uncalcined gold in the form of subtle exhalations. Boyle.

UNCALL'ED. adj. Not summoned; not sent for; not demanded.

Basilus had servants, who, though they came not uncalled, yet at call were ready. Sidney.

He, bolder now, uncall'd before her stood. Milton.

Mild Lucina came uncall'd, and stood Beside the struggling boughs, and heard the groan,
Then reach'd her midwife hand to speed the throes. Dryden.

To UNCA'LM. v. a. To disturb. A harsh word.

What strange disquiet has uncalm'd your breast,
Inhuman fair, to rob the dead of rest? Dryden.

UNCAN'CELED. adj. Not erased; not abrogated.

I only mourn my yet uncancell'd score;
You put me past the pow'r of paying more. Dryden.

UNCANO'NICAL. adj. Not agreeable to the canons.

UNCA'PABLE. adj. [incapable, Fr. incapax, Lat.] Not capable; not susceptible.

Now more frequently incapable.

Thou art come to answer
A stony adversary, an inhuman wretch,
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy. Shakspeare.
He who believes himself uncapable of pardon, goes on without any care of reforming. Hammond.
This, whilst they are under the deceit of it, makes them uncapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error. Locke UNCA'RED for. adj. Not regarded; not attended to.
Their kings, to better their worldly estate, left their own and their people's ghostly condition uncared for.
UNCA'RNATE adj. Not fleshly.
Nor need we be afraid to ascribe that to the incarnate son, which sometimes is attributed unto the uncarnate father. Brown.
To UNCA'SE v. a.
1. To disengage from any covering.
See Pompey is uncasing for the combat. Shaksp.
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead.
'Tis hatch'd, and shall be so: Tranio, at once Uncase thee; take my colour'd hat and cloak.
Shakspeare.
Uncase me, and do with me what you please.
Addison.
2. To flay; to strip.
All men him uncased 'gan deride. Hub. Tale.
Partly by his voice, and partly by his ears, the ass was discovered; and consequently uncased, well laughed at, and well cudgelled. L'Estrange.
UNCA'UGHT adj. Not yet caught.
Let him fly far;
Not in this land shall he remain uncaught;
And found, dispatch'd. Shakspeare.
His bosom glows with treasures yet uncaught.
Gay.
UNCA'USED adj. Having no precedent cause.
Unforeseen, they say, is unprepar'd:
Uncautious Arcite thought himself alone. Dryden.
UNCE'LEBRATED adj. Not solemnized.
Thus was the first day, ev'n and morn;
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial choirs. Milton.
UNCENSURED adj. Exempt from publick reproach.
How difficult must it be for any ruler to live uncensured, where every one of the community is thus qualified for modelling the constitution! Addison.
Fear most to tax an honourable fool,
Whole right it is uncensur'd to be dull. Pope.
To be uncensured, and to be obscure, is the same thing. Pope.
UNCERTAIN adj. [incertain, Fr. incertus,
Latin.]
1. Doubtful; not certainly known.
That sacred pile, so vast, so high,
That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky,
Uncertain seems; and may be thought a proud Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud. Denham.
2. Doubtful; not having certain knowledge.
Man, without the protection of a superior being, is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.
Condemn'd on Caucasus to lie,
Still to be dying, not to die;
With certain pain, uncertain of relief,
True emblem of a wretched lover's grief. Granville.
3. Not sure in the consequence.
I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! Shakspeare.
In the bright air the faultchion shone,
Or whistling slings dismiss'd th' uncertain stone.
Gay.
The search of our future being is but a needles, anxious, and uncertain haste to be knowing, sooner than we can, what, without all this solicitude, we shall know a little later. Pope.

4. Not exact; not sure.
Ascanius young, and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim;
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides.
Dryden.
5. Unsettled; unregular.
As the form of our publick service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seemed best. Hooker.
UNCERTAINED adj. Made uncertain.
A word not used.
The diversity of seasons are not so uncertained by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Raleigh.
UNCERTAINTY adv.
1. Not surely; not certainly.
Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which so uncertainly must come:
When what was brought so far, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home. Dryden.
Names must be of very unsteady meaning, if the ideas be referred to standards without us, that cannot be known at all, or but very imperfectly and uncertainly. Locke.
2. Not confidently.
They that are past all hope of good, are past
All fear of ill; and yet, if he be dead,
Speak softly, or uncertainly. Denham.
UNCERTAINTY n. f.
1. Dubiousness; want of knowledge.
All great concerns must delays endure;
Rashness and haste make all things insecure:
And if uncertain thy pretensions be,
Stay till fit time wear out uncertainty. Denham.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
Here then remain with your uncertainty;
Let ev'ry feeble rumour shake your hearts. Shaksp.
2. Inaccuracy.
That which makes doubtfulness and uncertainty
in the signification of some, more than other words, is the difference of ideas they stand for. Locke.
3. Contingency; want of certainty.
God's omniscience is a light shining into every dark corner, steadfastly grasping the greatest and most slippery uncertainties. South.
4. Something unknown.
Our shepherd's case is every man's case, and quits a moral certainty for an uncertainty, and leaps from the honest business he was brought up to, into a trade he has no skill in. L'Estrange.
To UNCHA'IN v. a. To free from chains.
Minerva thus to Perseus lent her shield,
Secure of conquest, sent him to the field:
The hero acted what the queen ordain'd;
So was his fame complete, and Andromede unchain'd. Prior.
UNCHA'NGEABLE adj. Immutable; not subject to variation.
If the end for which a law provideth, be perpetually necessary; and the way whereby it provideth perpetually also most apt, no doubt but that every such law ought for ever to remain unchangeable.
Hooker.
UNCHA'NGEABLENESS n. f. Immutability.
This unchangeableness of colour I am now to describe. Newton.
UNCHA'NGEABLY adv. Immutably;
without change.

When our fortunes are violently changed, our spirits are unchanged. Taylor.
More safe I sing with mortal voice; unchang'd
To hoarse, or mute. Milton.

2. Not alterable.
Dismiss thy fear,
And heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear:
More pow'ful gods have torn thee from my side.
Dryden.
Honour unchang'd, a principle profess,
Fixt to one side, but mod'rate to the rest. Pope.
UNCHANGING adj. Suffering no alteration.
But that thy face is, vizor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee blush.
Shakspeare.
True expression, like th' unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whate'er it shines upon:
It gilds all objects, but it alters none. Pope.
To UNCHA'RGE v. a. To retract an accusation.
Even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident. Shakspeare.
UNCHA'RITABLE adj. Contrary to charity; contrary to the universal love prescribed by christianity.
All the rich mines of learning ransack'd are
To furnish ammunition for this war;
Uncharitable zeal our reason whets,
And double edges on our passion sets. Denham.
This fills the minds of weak men with uncharitable interpretations of those actions of which they are not competent judges. Addison.
UNCHA'RITABLENESS n. f. Want of charity.
The penitence of the criminal may have num-ber'd him among the faints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames.
Government of the Tongue.
God commands us to love our enemies, so that if we hate them we sin, and are justly kept back by our own uncharitableness. Kettlewell.
Heaven and hell are the proper regions of mercy and uncharitableness. Atterbury.
UNCHA'RITABLY adv. In a manner contrary to charity.
I did not mean the cutting off all that nation with the sword; which, far be it from me that I should ever think so desperately, or with so uncharitably.
Spenser.
Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd.
Shakspeare.
Men, imprudently and uncharitably often, employ their zeal for persons. Sprat.
UNCHA'RY adj. Not wary; not cautious; not frugal.
I've said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid my honour too unchary out. Shakspeare.

Prayer can unclasp the girdles of the north, saying to a mountain of ice, Be thou removed hence, and cast into the sea. Taylor.

UNCLASSICK. adj. Not classick.

Angel of dulness, sent to scatter round
Her magick charms o'er all unclassick ground. Pope.

UNCLE. n. f. [uncle, Fr.] The brother of one's father or mother.

Hamlet punishes his uncle rather for his own death, than the murder of his father. Shaksp.

UNCLEAN. adj.

1. Foul; dirty; filthy.

Charon,

A fordid god: down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

Priests are patterns for the rest;
The gold of heav'n, who bear the God impress'd:
But when the precious coin is kept unclean,
The sov'reign's image is no longer seen.
If they be foul, on whom the people trust,
Well may the baser brass contract a rust. Dryden.

2. Not purified by ritual practices.

3. Foul with sin.

Besides, how vile, contemptible, ridiculous,
What act more execrably unclean, profane? Milton.
What agonies must he endure, what difficulties overcome, before he can cleanse himself from the pollutions of sin, and be a fit inhabitant of that holy place, where no unclean thing shall enter? Rogers.

4. Lewd; unchaste.

Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairy-like too, pinch the unclean knight,
And ask him, why that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread,
In shape profane. Shaksp.

Some tree, whose broad, smooth leaves together
few'd,

And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new comer, shame,
There fit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

Adultery of the heart, consisting of inordinate and unclean affections. Perkins.

wind
About their shady brows in wanton rings. Craslow.
Thy locks uncomb'd like a rough wood appear. Dryden.

UNCOMESTABLE. adj. Inaccessible; unattainable. A low, corrupt word.

UNCOMELINESS. n. f. Want of grace;
want of beauty.

The ruined churches are so unhandsofly parched, and thatched, that men do even shun the places, for the uncomeliness thereof. Spenser.

He prais'd women's modesty, and gave orderly,
well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness. Shakspeare.

Those arches which the Tuscan writers call di terzo, and di quarto acuto, because they always concur in an acute angle, both for the natural imbecility of the angle itself, and likewise for their very uncomeliness, ought to be exiled from judicious eyes. Wotton.

Forgetting that duty of modest concealment which they owed to the father of their country, in case they had discovered any real uncomeliness. King Charles.

The beauty or uncomeliness in good and ill-breeding, will make deeper impressions on them, in the examples of others, than from any rules. Locke.

UNCOMELY. adj. Not comely; wanting grace.

Though he thought Inquisitiveness an uncomely
guest, he could not but ask who she was. Sidney.

Neither is the same accounted an uncomely manner of riding; for great warriors say, they never saw a more comely man than the Irishman, nor that cometh on more bravely in his charge. Spenser.

Many, who troubled them most in their councils, durst not go thither, for fear of uncomely affronts. Clarendon.

Uncomely courage, unbecoming skill. Thomson.

UNCOMFORTABLE. adj.

1. Affording no comfort; gloomy; dismal; miserable.

He much complaineth of his own uncomfortable exile, wherein he sustained many most grievous indignities, and endured the want of sundry, both pleasures and honours, before enjoyed. Hooker.

Christmas is in the most dead, uncomfortable time of the year, when the poor people would suffer very much, if they had not good cheer to support them. Addison.

Ours is a melancholy and uncomfortable portion here below! A place, where not a day passes, but we eat our bread with sorrow and cares: the present troubles us, the future amazes; and even the past fills us with grief and anguish. Wake.

The sun ne'er views th' uncomfortable seats,
When radiant he advances or retreats. Pope.

2. Receiving no comfort; melancholy.

UNCOMFORTABLENESS. n. f. Want of cheerfulness.

The want of just dispositions to the holy sacra-

It is easy to see what judgment is to be passed upon all those affected, uncommanded, absurd austerities of the Romish profession. South.

UNCOMMON. adj. Not frequent; rare;
not often found or known.

Some of them are uncommon, but such as the reader must assent to, when he sees them explained. Addison.

UNCOMMONLY. adv. Not frequently;
to an uncommon degree.

UNCOMMONNESS. n. f. Infrequency;
rareness; rarity.

Our admiration of the antiquities about Naples and Rome, does not so much arise out of their greatness as uncommonness. Addison.

UNCOMMUNICATED. adj. Not communicated.

There is no such mutual infusion as really causeth the same natural operations or properties to be made common unto both substances; but whatsoever is natural to deity, the same remaineth in Christ un-communicated unto his manhood; and whatsoever natural to manhood, his deity thereof is incapable. Hooker.

UNCOMPACT. adj. Not compact; not closely adhering.

These rivers were not streams of running matter;
for how could a liquid, that lay hardening by degrees, settle in such a furrowed, uncompact surface? Addison.

UNCOMPANIED. adj. Having no companion.

Thence she fled, uncompained, unsought. Fairfax.

pity.

Neither deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate fire. Shakspeare.
Hero and Leander were drowned in the uncom-passionate surges. Sandys.

If thou in strength all mortals dost exceed;
In uncompassionate anger do not so. Milton.

UNCOMPELLED. adj. Free from compulsion.

The amorous needle, once joined to the loadstone, would never, uncompelled, forsake the enchanting mineral. Boyle.

Keep my voyage from the royal ear,
Nor, uncompell'd, the dangerous truth betray,
Till twice six times descends the lamp of day. Pope.

UNCOMPLAISANT. adj. Not civil; not obliging.

A natural roughness makes a man uncomplaisant to others, so that he has no deference for their inclinations. Locke.

UNCOMPLETE. adj. Not perfect; not finished.

Various incidents do not make different fables, but are only the uncomplete and unfinished parts of the same fable. Pope.

UNCOMPOUNDED. adj.

1. Simple; not mixed.

Hardness may be reckoned the property of all uncompounded matter. Newton.

Your uncompounded atoms, you Figures in numbers infinite allow;
From which, by various combination, springs
This unconfin'd diversity of things. Blackmore.

2. Simple; not intricate.

The substance of the faith was comprised in that uncompounded style, but was afterwards prudently enlarged, for the repelling heretical invaders. Hammond.

UNCOMPREHENSIVE. adj.

1. Unable to comprehend.

2. In Shakspeare it seems to signify incomprehensible.

The providence, that's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Finds bottom in th' uncomprehensive deep. Shakspeare.

UNC

UNCOMPRESSED. adj. Free from compression.

We might be furnished with a reply, by setting down the different weight of our receiver, when emptied, and when full of uncompressed air. Boyle.

UNCONCEIVABLE. adj. Not to be understood; not to be comprehended by the mind.

In the communication of motion by impulse, we can have no other conception, but of the passing of motion out of one body into another; which is as obscure and unconceivable, as how our minds move or stop our bodies by thought. Locke.

Those atoms wondrous small must be,
Small to an unconceivable degree;
Since though these radiant spoils dispers'd in air,
Do ne'er return, and ne'er the sun repair. Blackmore.

UNCONCEIVABLENESS. n. f. Incomprehensibility.

The unconceivableness of something they find in one, throws men violently into the contrary hypothesis, though altogether unintelligible. Locke.

UNCONCEIVED. adj. Not thought; not imagined.

Vast is my theme, yet unconceiv'd, and brings Untoward words, scarce loosen'd yet from things. Creech.

UNCONCERN. n. f. Negligence; want of interest; freedom from anxiety; freedom from perturbation.

Such things had been charged upon us by the malice of enemies, the want of judgment in friends, and the unconcern of indifferent persons. Swift.

UNCONCERNED. adj.

1. Having no interest.

An idle person is like one that is dead, unconcerned
in the changes and necessities of the world. Taylor.

The earth's motion is to be admitted, notwithstanding the seeming contrary evidence of unconcerned senses. Glanville.

It seems a principle in human nature, to incline one way more than another, even in matters where we are wholly unconcerned. Swift.

2. Not anxious; not disturbed; not affected. Before the thing it has with in Milton, for in Dryden, and at in Rogers.

See the morn,

All unconcern'd with our unrest, begins
Her rosy progress smiling. Milton.

You call'd me into all your joys, and gave me
An equal share; and in this depth of misery
Can I be unconcerned? Denham.

The virgin from the ground
Upstart fresh, already clos'd the wound:
And unconcern'd for all the felt before,
Precipitates her flight along the shore. Dryden.

Happy mortals, unconcern'd for more,
Confin'd their wishes to their native shore. Dryden.

We shall be easy and unconcerned at all the accidents of the way, and regard only the event of the journey. Rogers.

UNCONCERNEDLY. adv. Without interest or affection; without anxiety; without perturbation.

Not the most cruel of our conquering foes
So unconcern'dly can relate our woes,
As not to lend a tear. Denham.

Death was denounc'd, that frightful sound,
Which ev'n the best can hardly bear:
He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcern'dly cast his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the griesly challenger. Dryden.

Is heaven, with its pleasures for evermore, to be parted with so unconcernedly? Is an exceeding and eternal weight of glory too light in the balance against the hopeless death of the atheist, and utter extinction? Bentley.

UNCONCERNEDNESS. n. f. Freedom from anxiety, or perturbation.

No man, having done a kindness to another, would think himself justly dealt with in a total neglect and unconcernedness of the person who had received that kindness. South.

UNCONCERNING. adj. Not interesting; not affecting; not belonging to one.

Things impossible in their nature, or unconcerning to us, cannot beget it. Decay of Piety.

This science of medals, which is charged with so many unconcerning parts of knowledge, and built on such mean materials, appears ridiculous to those that have not examined it. Addison.

UNCONCERNMENT. n. s. The state of having no share.

Being privileged by an happy unconcernment in those legal murders, you may take a sweeter relish of your own innocence. South.

UNCONCLU'DENT. } adj. Not decisive; UNCONCLU'DING. } inferring no plain or certain conclusion or consequence.

Our arguments are inevident and unconcluding. Hale.

He makes his understanding only the warehouse of other men's false and unconcluding reasonings, rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.

UNCONCLU'DINGNESS. n. s. Quality of being unconcluding.

Either may be much more probably maintained than hitherto, as against the unaccuracy and the unconcludingness of the analytical experiments vulgarly relied on. Boyle.

UNCONCOCTED. adj. Not digested; not matured.

We swallow cherry-stones, but void them unconcocted. Brown.

In theology, I put as great a difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and an unconcocted, evanid meteor. Glanville.

Did she extend the gloomy clouds on high,
Where all th' amazing fireworks of the sky,
In unconcocted seeds fermenting lie. Blackmore.

UNCONDE'MNED. adj. Not condemned.

It was a familiar and uncondemned practice amongst the Greeks and Romans, to expose, without pity, their innocent infants. Locke.

UNCONDITIONAL. adj. Absolute; not limited by any terms.

O pass not, Lord! an absolute decree,
Or bind thy sentence unconditional;

But in the sentence our remorse foresee,
And, in that foresight, this thy doom recal. Dryd.

Our Saviour left a power in his church to absolve men from their sins; but this was not an absolute and unconditional power vested in any, but founded upon repentance, and on the penitent's belief in him alone. Ayliffe.

UNCONFINABLE. adj. Unbounded.

You rogue! you stand upon your honour! why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep mine honour. Shakspeare.

UNCONFINED. adj.

1. Free from restraint.

I wonder at it.

That shews thou art unconfined. Shakspeare.

Chaucer has refined on Boccace, and has mended the stories he has borrowed: though prose allows more liberty of thought, and the expression is more easy when unconfined by numbers. Our countryman carries weight, and yet wins the race at disadvantage. Dryden.

Poets, a race long unconfined and free,
Still fond and proud of savage liberty,
Receiv'd his laws. Pope.

2. Having no limits; unbounded.

If that which men esteem their happiness, were, like the light, the same sufficient and unconfined good, whether ten thousand enjoy the benefit of it, or but one, we should see men's good will and kind endeavours would be as universal. Spektator.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfined;
A knowledge both of books and human kind. Pope.

UNCONFORMED. adj.

1. Not fortified by resolution; not strengthened; raw; weak.

The unexpected speech
The king had made upon the new-raised force,
In th' unconformed troops much fear did breed. Daniel.

2. Not strengthened by additional testimony.

He would have resign'd
To him his heav'nly office, nor was long
His witness unconform'd. Milton.

3. Not settled in the church by the rite of confirmation.

UNCONFORM. adj. Unlike; dissimilar; not analogous.

Not unconform to other shining globes. Milton.

UNCONFORMABLE. adj. Inconsistent; not conforming.

Unto those general rules, they know we do not defend, that we may hold any thing unconformable. Hooker.

Moral good, is an action conformable to the rule of our duty. Moral evil, is an action unconformable to it, or a neglect to fulfil it. Watts.

UNCONFORMITY. n. s. Incongruity; inconsistency.

The moral goodness or evil of men's actions, which consist in their conformity or unconformity to right reason, must be eternal, necessary, and unchangeable. South.

UNCONFUSED. adj. Distinct; free from confusion.

It is more distinct and unconfused than the sensitive memory. Hale.

If in having our ideas in the memory ready at hand, consists quickness of parts; in this of having them unconfused, and being able nicely to distinguish one thing from another, consists the exactness of judgment. Locke.

UNCONFUSEDLY. adv. Without confusion.

Every one finds that he knows when any idea is in his understanding, and that, when more than one are there, he knows them, distinctly and unconfusedly, from one another. Locke.

UNCONFUTABLE. adj. Irrefragable; not to be convicted of error.

One political argument they boasted of as unconfutable, that from the marriages of ecclesiastics would ensue poverty in many of the children, and thence a disgrace and burden to the church. Sprat.

UNCONGEALED. adj. Not concentered by cold.

By exposing wine, after four months digestion in horse-dung, unto the extremity of cold, the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit retire, and be found uncongealed in the center. Brown.

UNCONJUGAL. adj. Not consistent with matrimonial faith; not befitting a wife or husband.

My name

To all posterity may stand defam'd:
With malediction mention'd, and the blot
Of falsehood most unconjugal traduc'd. Milton.

UNCONNECTED. adj. Not coherent; not joined by proper transitions or dependence of parts; lax; loose; vague.

Those who contemplate only the fragments broken off from any science, dispersed in short unconnected discourses, can never survey an entire body of truth. Watts.

UNCONNI'VING. adj. Not forbearing penal notice.

To that hideous place not so confin'd,
By rigour unconni'ving; but that oft,
Leaving my dolorous prison, I enjoy
Large liberty, to round this globe of earth. Milton.

UNCONQUERABLE. adj. Not to be subdued; insuperable; not to be overcome; invincible.

Louis was darting his thunder on the Alps, and causing his enemies to feel the force of his unconquerable arms. Dryden.

Spadillo first, unconquerable lord!
Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board. Pope.

UNCONQUERABLY. adv. Invincibly; insuperably.

The herds of Iphycus, detain'd in wrong;
Wild, furious herds, unconquerably strong. Pope.

UNCONQUERED. adj.

1. Not subdued; not overcome.

To die so tamely,
O'ercome by passion and misfortune,
And still unconquer'd by my foes, sounds ill. Denham.

Unconquer'd yet, in that forlorn estate,
His manly courage overcame his fate. Dryden.

2. Insuperable; invincible.

These brothers had a-while served the king of Pontus; and in all his affairs, especially of war, whereunto they were only apt, they had shewed as unconquered courage, so a rude faithfulness. Sidney.

What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield,
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin!
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone,
But rigid looks, and chaste austerity,
And noble grace, that dash'd brute violence
With sudden adoration and blank awe? Milton.

UNCONSCIONABLE. adj.

1. Exceeding the limits of any just claim or expectation.

A man may oppose an unconscionable request for an unjustifiable reason. L'Estrange.

2. Forming unreasonable expectations.

You cannot be so unconscionable as to charge me for not subscribing of my name, for that would reflect too grossly upon your own party, who never dare it. Dryden.

3. Enormous; vast. A low word.

His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n,
Stalking with less unconscionable strides,
And lower looks, but in a sultry chase. Milton.

4. Not guided or influenced by conscience.

How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable? hardly ever did any man of no conscience continue a man of any credit long. South.

UNCONSCIONABLENESS. n. s. Unreasonableness of hope or claim.

UNCONSCIONABLY. adv. Unreasonably.

Indeed 'tis pity you should miss
Th' arrears of all your services;
And, for th' eternal obligation
Y' have laid upon th' ungrateful nation,
Be us'd so unconscionably hard,
As not to find a just reward. Hudibras.

This is a common vice; though all things here
Are sold, and sold unconscionably dear. Dryden.

UNCONSCIOUS. adj.

1. Having no mental perception.

Unconscious causes only still impart
Their utmost skill, their utmost power exert:
Those which can freely chuse, discern, and know,
Can more or less of art and care bestow. Blackmore.

2. Unacquainted; unknowing.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

UNCONSECRATED. adj. Not sacred; not dedicated; not devoted.

The sin of Israel had even unconsecrated and profaned that sacred edifice, and robbed it of its only defence. South.

UNCONSENTED. adj. Not yielded.

We should extend it even to the weaknesses of our natures, to our proneness to evil: for however these, unconsented to, will not be imputed to us, yet are they matter of sorrow. Wake.

UNCONSIDERED. adj. Not considered; not attended to.

Love yourself; and in that love,
Not unconsidered leave your honour. Shakspeare.

It will not be unconsidered, that we find no open track in this labyrinth. Brown.

UNCONSONANT. adj. Incongruous; unfit; inconsistent.

It seemeth a thing unconsonant, that the world should honour any other as the Saviour, but him whom it honoureth as the creator of the world. Hooker.

UNCONSTANT. adj. [inconstant, French; inconstans, Latin.] Fickle; not steady; changeable; mutable.

More unconstant than the wind; who woos
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the north;
And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew-dropping south.

Shakespeare.

Th' unconstant skies
Do change their course as sev'ral winds arise. May.
UNCONSTRAINED. adj. Free from compulsion.

Will you, with free and unconstrained soul,
Give me your daughter? Shakespeare.

These be the miseries which our first parents brought upon all mankind, unto whom God, in his creation, gave a free and unconstrained will.

Raleigh.

His highness is return'd. —
And unconstrain'd! But with what change
Of countenance did he receive the message?

Denham.

Made for his use, yet he has form'd us so,
We unconstrain'd, what he commands us, do.

Dryden.

UNCONSTRAINEDLY. adv. Without force suffered.

Such a patron has frankly, generously, and uncon-strainedly relieved me. South.

UNCONSTRAINT. n. s. Freedom from constraint; ease.

Mr. Dryden writ more like a scholar; and though the greatest master of poetry, he wanted that easiness, that air of freedom and unconstraint, which is more sensibly to be perceived than described.

Felton.

UNCONSULTING. adj. [inconsultus, Lat.]
Heady; rash; improvident; imprudent.

It was the fair Zelmane, Plexirtus's daughter, whom unconsulting affection, unfortunately born to mewards, had made borrow so much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent rayments.

Sidney.

UNCONSUMED. adj. Not wasted; not destroyed by any wasting power.

Hope never comes,
That comes to all, but torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge fed
With ever-burning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex ideas, signified by the word gold. Locke.

UNCONSUMMATE. adj. Not consummated.

Acron came to the fight,
Who left his spouse betroth'd, and unconsummate night. Dryden.

UNCONTEMNED. adj. Not despised.

Which of the peers
Have uncontemn'd gone by him, or at least Stood not neglected? Shakespeare.

UNCONTENTED. adj. Not contented;
not satisfied.

Permit me, chief,
To lead this uncontented gift away. Dryden.

UNCONTENTINGNESS. n. s. Want of power to satisfy.

The decreed uncontentingness of all other goods, is richly repaid by its being but an aptness to prove a rise to our love's settling in God. Boyle.

UNCONTESTABLE. adj. Indisputable;
not controvertible.

Where is the man that has uncontestible evidence of the truth of all that he holds, or of the falshood of all he condemns? Locke.

UNCONTESTED. adj. Not disputed; evident.

'Tis by experience uncontested found,
Bodies orbicular, when whirling round,
Still shake off all things on their surface plac'd.

Blackmore.

UNCONTRITE. adj. Not religiously penitent.

The priest, by absolving an uncontrite sinner, cannot make him contrite. Hammond.

UNCONTROLLABLE. adj.

1. Resistless; powerful beyond opposition.
VOL. II.

Gaza mourns,
And all that band them to resist
His uncontrollable intent. Milton.

2. Indisputable; irrefragable.
The pension was granted, by reason of the king of England's uncontrollable title to England.

Hayward.

This makes appear the error of those, who think it an uncontrollable maxim, that power is always safer lodged in many hands, than in one; those many are as capable of enslaving as a single person.

Swift.

UNCONTROLLABLY. adv.

1. Without possibility of opposition.

2. Without danger of refutation.

Uncontrollably, and under general consent, many opinions are passant, which, upon due examination, admit of doubt. Brown.

Since this light was to rest within them, and the judgment of it wholly to remain in themselves, they might safely and uncontrollably pretend it greater or less. South.

UNCONTROLLLED. adj.

1. Unresisted; unopposed; not to be overruled.

Should I try the uncontrolled worth
Of this pure cause, 'twould kindle my rapt spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize.

Milton.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,
Extends thy uncontrolled, and boundless reign.

Dryden.

The British navy, uncontrolled,
Shall wave her double cross t' extreme d'clime Terrific, and return with odorous spoils. Philips.

2. Not convinced; not refuted.

That Julius Cæsar was so born, is an uncontrolled report. Hayward.

UNCONTROLLLEDLY. adv. Without control; without opposition.

Mankind avert killing, and being killed; but when the phantasm honour has once possessed the mind, no reluctance of humanity is able to make head against it; but it commands uncontrolledly.

Decay of Piety.

UNCONTROVERTED. adj. Not disputed;
not liable to debate.

One reason of the uncontroverted certainty of mathematical science is, because 'tis built upon clear and settled significations of names. Glanville.

UNCONVERSABLE. adj. Not suitable to conversation; not social.

Faith and devotion are traduced and ridiculed, as morose, unconversible qualities. Rogers.

UNCONVERTED. adj.

1. Not persuaded of the truth of christianity.

Salvation belongeth unto none, but such as call upon the name of our Lord Jesus Christ: which nations, as yet unconverted, neither do, nor possibly can do, till they believe. Hooker.

The unconverted heathens, who were pressed by the many authorities that confirmed our Saviour's miracles, accounted for them after the same manner. Addison.

The apostle reminds the Ephesians of the guilt and misery of their former unconverted estate, when aliens from the commonwealth of Israel.

Rogers.

2. Not religious; not yet induced to live a holy life. Thus Baxter wrote a Call to the Unconverted.

UNCONVINCED. adj. Not convinced.

A way not to be introduced into the seminaries of those, who are to propagate religion, or philosophy, amongst the ignorant and unconvinced. Locke.

To UNCO'RD. v. a. To loose a thing bound with cords.

UNCORRECTED. adj. Inaccurate; not polished to exactness.

I have written this too hastily and too loosely: it comes out from the first draught, and uncorrected.

Dryden.

UNCORRUPT. adj. Honest; upright; not tainted with wickedness; not influenced by iniquitous interest.

The pleasures of sin, and this world's vanities, are censured with uncorrupt judgment. Hooker.

Men alledge they ne'er can find
Those beauties in a female mind,
Which raise a flame that will endure
For ever uncorrupt and pure. Swift.

UNCORRUPTED. adj. Not vitiated; not depraved.

Such a hero never springs,
But from the uncorrupted blood of kings. Roscomm.

Man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted reason knew,
And with a native bent did good pursue. Dryden.

Nothing is more valuable than the records of antiquity: I wish we had more of them, and more uncorrupted. Locke.

UNCORRUPTNESS. n. s. Integrity; uprightness.

In doctrine, shew uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity. Titus.

To UNCO'VER. v. a.

1. To divest of a covering.

After you are up, uncover your bed, and open the curtains to air it. Harvey.

Seeing an object several millions of leagues, the very instant it is uncovered, may be shewn to be a mistake in matter of fact. Locke.

2. To deprive of clothes.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the skies. Shakespeare.

3. To strip of the roof.

Porches and schools,
Uncover'd, and with scaffolds cumber'd stood. Prior.

4. To show openly; to strip of a veil, or concealment.

He cover'd; but his robe
Uncover'd more: so rose the Danite strong,
Shorn of his strength. Milton.

There will certainly come some day or other, to uncover every soul of us. Pope.

5. To bare the head, as in the presence of a superiour.

Rather let my head dance on a bloody pole,
Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar groom. Shaksp.

UNCO'UNSELLABLE. adj. Not to be advised.

It would have been uncounsellable to have marched, and have left such an enemy at their backs. Clarendon.

UNCO'UNTABLE. adj. Innumerable.

Those uncountable, glorious bodies were not set in the firmament for no other end than to adorn it.

Raleigh.

UNCO'UNTERFEIT. adj. Genuine; not spurious.

True zeal is not any one single affection of the soul, but a strong mixture of many holy affections, filling the heart with all pious intentions; all, not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent. Sprat.

To UNCO'UPLE. v. a. To loose dogs from their couples.

Uncouple in the western valley, go;
Dispatch, I say, and find the forester. Shakespeare.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green;

Uncouple here, and let us make a bay. Shakespeare.

The land on which they fought, th' appointed place,

In which th' uncoupled hounds began the chase.

Dryden.

UNCO'URTEOUS. adj. Uncivil; unpolite.

In behaviour some will say, ever sad, surely sober, and somewhat given to musing, but never uncour-teous. Sidney.

UNCO'URTEOUSLY. adv. Uncivilly; un-politely.

Though somewhat merrily, yet uncourteously he railed upon England, objecting extreme beggary, and mere barbarousness unto it. Ascham.

UNCO'URTLINESS. n. f. Unsuitableness of manners to a court; inelegance.

The quakers presented an address, which, notwithstanding the uncourtlinefs of their phrases, the sense was very honest. Addison.

UNCO'URTLY. adj. Inelegant of manners; uncivil.

The lord treasurer not entering into those refinements of paying the publick money upon private considerations, hath been so uncourtly as to stop it. Swift.

UNCO'UTH. adj. [uncuð, Saxon.] Odd; strange; unusual.

A very uncouth sight was to behold,
How he did fashion his untoward pace;
For as he forward mov'd his footing old,
So backward still was turn'd his wrinkled face. Spenser.

The lovers standing in this doleful wise,
A warrior bold unware approached near,
Uncouth in arms yclad, and strange disguise. Fairfax.

I am surprized with an uncouth fear;
A chilling sweat o'erruns my trembling joints;
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see. Shakspeare.

The trouble of thy thoughts this night
Affects me equally; nor can I like
This uncouth dream, of evil sprung, I fear. Milton.

Say on;
For I that day was absent, as befel,
Bound on a voyage uncouth, and obscure,
Far on excursion towards the gates of hell. Milton.

It was so uncouth a sight, for a fox to appear without a tail, that the very thought made him weary of his life. L'Estrange.

The secret ceremonies I conceal,
Uncouth, perhaps unlawful to reveal. Dryden.

I am more in danger to misunderstand his true meaning, than if I had come to him with a mind unpossessed by doctors of my sect, whose reasonings will of course make all chime that way, and make the genuine meaning of the author seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me. Locke.

He made that a pleasant study, which in the hands of Bartolus and Baldus, was uncouth and rugged. Baker.

UNCO'UTHLY. adv. Oddly; strangely.

Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did their lubber state mankind beltride. Dryden.

UNCO'UTHNESS. n. f. Oddness; strangeness.

To deny himself in the lesser instances, that so when the greater come, they may not have the disadvantage of uncouthness, and perfect strangeness, to enhance their difficulty, must be acknowledged reasonable. Decay of Piety.

To UNCREA'TE. v. a. To annihilate; to reduce to nothing; to deprive of existence.

Tempt me with such affrights no more,
Left what I made I uncreate. Carew.
Who created thee, lamenting learn;
Who can uncreate thee thou shalt know. Milton.

UNCREA'TED. adj.

1. Not yet created.

How hast thou disturb'd Heav'n's blessed peace, and into nature brought Misery, uncreated till the crime
Of thy rebellion? Milton.

2. [incrée, French.] Not produced by creation.

What cause within, or what without is found,
That can a being uncreated bound? Blackmore.
The next paragraph proves, that the idea we have of God is God himself; it being something, as he says, uncreated. Locke.

UNCRE'DITABLENESS. n. f. Want of reputation.

To all other dissuaves, we may add this of the uncreditableness: the best that can be said is, that they use wit foolishly, whereof the one part devours the other. Decay of Piety.

UNCRO'PPED. adj. Not cropped; not gathered.

Thy abundance wants Partakers, and uncropp'd falls to the ground. Milt.

UNCRO'SSED. adj. Uncancelled.

Such gain the cap of him, that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd. Shakspeare.

UNCRO'UDED. adj. Not straitened by want of room.

An amphitheatre,
On its publick shows, unpeopled Rome,
And held uncrowded nations in its womb. Addison.

To UNCRO'WN. v. a. To deprive of a crown; to deprive of sovereignty.

He hath done me wrong;
And therefore I'll uncrown him ere 't be long. Shakspeare.

Ye powers!
See a sacred king uncrown'd;
See your offspring, Albion, bound. Dryden.

UN'CTION. n. f. [onction, French.]

1. The act of anointing.

The unction of the tabernacle, the table, the laver, the altar of God, with all the instruments appertaining thereunto, made them for ever holy. Hooker.

2. Unguent; ointment.

The king himself the sacred unction made;
As king by office, and as priest by trade. Dryden.

3. The act of anointing medically.

Such as are of hot constitutions, should use bathing in hot water, rather than unctions. Arbutnot.

4. Any thing softening, or lenitive.

Mother,
Lay not that flattering unction to your soul,
That not your trespas, but my madness speaks. Shakspeare.

5. The rite of anointing in the last hours.

Their extreme unction, administered as the dying man's viaticum, which St. James mentioned as the ceremony of his recovery, may be added. Hammond.

6. Any thing that excites piety and devotion; that which melts to devotion.

UNCTU'OSITY. n. f. [from unctuous.]

Fatness; oiliness.

Fuliginous exhalations contain an unctuosity in them, and arise from the matter of fuel. Brown.

UN'CTUOUS. adj. Fat; clammy; oily.

Dry up thy harrow'd veins, and plough-torn leas,
Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish draughts,
And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
That from it all consideration slips. Shakspeare.

A wand'ring fire,
Compact of unctuous vapour, which the night
Condenses, and the cold environs round,
Kindled through agitation to a flame. Milton.

So fat and unctuous, that with the bellies of five of them there is made usually a hoghead of train oil. Heylin.

The trees were unctuous fir, and mountain ash. Dryden.

Whether they unctuous exhalations are,
Fir'd by the sun, or seeming so alone. Dryden.

Th' infernal winds,
Dilating, and with unctuous vapour fed,
Disdain'd their narrow cells. Philips.

Camphire, oil-olive, linseed-oil, spirit of turpentine, and amber, are fat, sulphureous, unctuous bodies. Newton.

UN'CTUOUSNESS. n. f. Fatness; oiliness; clamminess; greasiness.

A great degree of unctuousness is not necessary to the production of the like effects. Boyle.

UNCU'CKOLDED. adj. Not made a cuckold.

As it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wiv'd, so it is a deadly sorrow to behold a foul knave uncuckolded. Shakspeare.

UNCU'ILLED. adj. Not gathered.

A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf, Uncull'd, as came to hand. Milton.

UNCU'LPABLE. adj. Not blamable.

Those canons do bind, as they are edicts of nature; which the Jews observing as yet unwritten, and thereby framing such church orders, as in their law were not prescribed, are notwithstanding in that respect unculpable. Hooker.

UNCU'LTIVATED. adj. [incultus, Latin.]

1. Not cultivated; not improved by tillage.

Our isle, indeed, too fruitful was before;
But all uncultivated lay,
Out of the solar walk. Dryden.

God gave the world to men in common; but since he gave it for their benefit, it cannot be supposed he meant it should always remain common and uncultivated. Locke.

2. Not instructed; not civilized.

The first tragedians found that serious stile
Too grave for their uncultivated age. Reform.

These are instances of nations, where uncultivated nature has been left to itself, without the help of letters. Locke.

Made out of her impatience, which not wanted
Shrewdness of policy. Shakspeare.

UNCU'RBED. adj. Licentious; not restrained.

With frank, and with uncurbed plainness,
Tell us the dauphin's mind. Shakspeare.

To UNCURL. v. a. To loose from ringlets, or convolutions.

There stands a rock; the raging billows roar
Above his head in storms; but, when 'tis clear, Uncurl their ridgy backs, and at his feet appear. Dryden.

The lion's foe lies prostrate on the plain,
He sheaths his paws, uncurls his angry mane;
And, pleas'd with bloodless honours of the day,
Walks over, and disdains th' inglorious prey. Dryden.

The furies sink upon their iron beds,
And snakes uncurl'd hang list'ning round their heads. Pope.

To UNCURL. v. n. To fall from the ringlets.

My fleece of woolly hair now uncurls,
Ev'n as an adder, when the doth unroll
To do some fatal execution. Shakspeare.

UNCU'RLED. adj. Not collected into ringlets.

Alike in feature both, and garb appear;
With honest faces, though uncurled hair. Dryden.

But since, alas, frail beauty must decay;
Curld or uncurld, since locks will turn to grey;
What then remains, but well our pow'r to use,
And keep good-humour still, whate'er we lose? Pope.

UNCU'RRENT. adj. Not current; not passing in common payment.

Your voice, like a piece of uncurrent gold, is not crack'd within the ring. Shakspeare.

I can no other answer make but thanks;
And thanks, and ever thanks: and oft good turns
Are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay. Shakspeare.

To UNCURSE. v. a. To free from any execration.

Uncurse their souls; their peace is made
With head, and not with hands. Shakspeare.

UNCU'RST. adj. Not execrated.

Sir John Hotham unrepented, unthreatened, uncursed by any language or secret imprecation of mine, not long after pays his own and his eldest son's heads. King Charles.

Undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers. Garrb.

UNDISTRACTED. adj. Not perplexed by contrariety of thoughts or desires.

When Enoch had walked with God, he was so far from being tired with that lasting assiduity, that he admitted him to a more immediate and more undistracted communion with himself. Boyle.

UNDISTRACTEDLY. adv. Without disturbance from contrariety of sentiments.

St. Paul tells us, that there is difference betwixt married and single persons; the affections of the latter being at liberty to devote themselves more undistractedly to God. Boyle.

UNDISTRACTEDNESS. n. s. Freedom from interruption by different thoughts.

The strange confusions of this nation disturb that calmness of mind, and undistractedness of thoughts. Boyle.

UNDISTURBED. adj.

1. Free from perturbation; calm; tranquil; placid.

To our high rais'd phantasy present
That undisturbed song of pure content. Milton.
The peaceful cities of th'Ausonian shore,
Lull'd in their ease, and undisturb'd before,
Are all on fire. Dryden.

A state where our imitation of God shall end in the undisturbed fruition of him to all eternity. Atterbury.

To be undisturbed in danger, sedately to consider what is fittest to be done, and to execute it steadily, is a complex idea of an action, which may exist. But to be undisturbed in danger, without using one's reason, is as real an idea as the other. Locke.

2. Not interrupted by any hinderance or molestation.

Nature stints our appetite,
And craves no more than undisturb'd delight;
Which minds, unmix'd with cares and fears, obtain;

A soul serene, a body void of pain. Dryden.

Unvex'd with quarrels, undisturb'd with noise,
The country king his peaceful realm enjoys. Dryd.

3. Not agitated.

A good conscience is a port which is land-locked on every side, where no winds can possibly invade. There a man may not only see his own image, but that of his Maker, clearly reflected from the undisturb'd and silent waters. Dryden.

UNDISTURBEDLY. adv. Calmly; peacefully.

Our minds are so weak, that they have need of all the assistances can be procured, to lay before them undisturbedly the thread and coherence of any discourse. Locke.

UNDIVIDABLE. adj. Not separable; not susceptible of division.

The best actors in the world for tragedy, pastoral, scene undividable, or poem unlimited. Shakspere.

How comes it, husband,
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?
Thyself, I call it, being strange to me;
That undividable, incorporate,
Am better than thy dear self's better part. Shaksp.

UNDIVIDED. adj. Unbroken; whole; not parted.

Love is not divided between God and God's enemy: we must love God with all our heart; that is, give him a whole and undivided affection. Taylor.

He extends through all extent;
Spreads undivided, operates unspent. Pope.

UNDIVULGED. adj. Secret; not promulgated.

Let the great gods
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou wretch,

UND

That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipp'd of justice. Shakspere.

TO UNDO. v. a. pret. undid; part. pass. undone. [from do.]

As this immoderate favour of the multitude did him no good, so will it undo so many as shall trust unto it. Hayward.

Subdued, undone, they did at last obey,
And change their own for their invader's way. Roscommon.

Where, with like haste, through several ways they run,
Some to undo, and some to be undone. Denham.

Hither ye come, dislike, and so undo

The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denham.

When I behold the charming maid,

I'm ten times more undone; while hope and fear

With variety of pain distract me. Addison.

2. To loose; to open what is shut or fastened; to unravel.

They false and fearful do their hands undo;
Brother, his brother; friend doth friend forsake. Sidney.

Pray undo this button. Shakspere.

We implore thy powerful hand,

To undo the charmed band

Of true virgin here distress'd. Milton.

Were men so dull, they could not see

That Lyce painted, should they flee,

Like simple birds, into a net,

Sogrossly woven, and ill-set;

Her own teeth would undo the knot,

And let all go that she had got. Waller.

3. To change any thing done to its former state; to recall, or annul any action.

They may know, that we are far from presuming to think that men can better any thing which God hath done, even as we are from thinking, that men should presume to undo some things of men, which God doth know they cannot better. Hooker.

It was a torment

To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax

Could not again undo. Shakspere.

We seem ambitious God's whole work t' undo;

Of nothing he made us, and we strive, too,

To bring ourselves to nothing back. Denne.

They make the Deity do and undo, go forward and backwards. Burnet.

By granting me so soon,

He has the merit of the gift undone. Dryden.

Without this our repentance is not real, because we have not done what we can to undo our fault. Tillotson.

Now will this woman, with a single glance,

Undo what I've been labouring all this while. Addison.

When in time the martial maid

Found out the trick that Venus play'd,

She shakes her helm; she knits her brows,

And, fir'd with indignation, vows,

To-morrow, ere the setting sun,

She'd all undo that she had done. Swift.

UNDOING. adj. Ruining; destructive.

The great and undoing mischief which befalls men, is by their being misrepresented. South.

UNDOING. n. s. Ruin; destruction; fatal mischief.

To the utter undoing of some, many things by strictness of law may be done, which equity and honest meaning forbiddeth. Hooker.

False lustre could dazzle my poor daughter to her undoing. Addison.

Fools that we are, we know that ye deceive us;

Yet act, as if the fraud was pleasing to us,

And our undoing joy. Roscoe.

Ign'rant of happiness, and blind to ruin,

How oft are our petitions our undoing! Harte.

UNDO'NE. adj. [from undo.]

1. Not done; not performed.

Do you smell a fault?—I cannot wish the fault undone, the issue of it being so proper. Shakspere.

There was no opportunity to call either of these two great persons to account for what they had done, or what they had left undone. Clarendon.

2. Ruined; brought to destruction.

UND

Already is the work begun;
And we rest all undone, till all be done. Daniel.

UNDOUBTED. adj. Indubitable; indisputable; unquestionable.
His fact, till now, came not to an undoubted proof. Shakespeare.
Thou, Spirit, who led'st this glorious eremite
Into the desert, his victorious field, Against the spiritual foe, and brought'st him thence,
By proof th' undoubted Son of God, inspire. Milton.
The relations of your trials may be received as undoubted records of certain events, and as securely be depended on as the propositions of Euclid. Glanville.
Made the world tremble with a num'rous host,
And of undoubted victory did boast. Waller.
Though none of these be strict demonstration, yet we have an undoubted assurance of them, when they are proved by the best arguments that the nature of the thing will bear. Tillotson.

UNDOUBTEDLY. adv. Indubitably; without question; without doubt.
Some fault undoubtedly there is in the very resemblance of idolaters. Hooker.
This cardinal, undoubtedly
Was fashion'd to much honour. Shakespeare.
Undoubtedly God will relent, and turn
From his displeasure. Milton.
The original is undoubtedly one of the greatest this age has produced. Dryden.
He that believes the christian doctrine, if he adhere to it, and live accordingly, shall undoubtedly be saved. Tillotson.

UNDOUBTING. adj. Admitting no doubt.
They to whom all this is revealed, and received with an undoubting faith, if they do not presently set about so easy and so happy a task, must acknowledge themselves in the number of the blind. Hammond.

UNDRAWN. adj. Not pulled by any external force.
Forth rush'd
The chariot of paternal deity,
Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel undrawn;
Itself instinct with spirit, but convoy'd
By four cherubick shapes. Milton.

UNDREADED. adj. Not feared.
Better far,
Than still at hell's dark threshold t' have sat watch,
Unnam'd, undreaded, and thyself half-starv'd. Milton.

UNDREAMED. adj. Not thought on.
A course more promising,
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain
To miseries enough. Shakespeare.

UNDRESS. v. a. [from dress.]
1. To divest of clothes; to strip.
Undress you, and come now to bed. Shakespeare.
All were stol'n aside
To counsel and undress the bride. Suckling.
Her fellows press'd,
And the reluctant nymph by force undress'd. Addison.

Four pounds of undried hops, thorough ripe, will make one of dry. Mortimer.

UND

UNDRI'VEN. adj. Not impelled either
way.
As wint'ry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try;
The doubtful rack of heav'n
Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n. Dryden.

UNDRO'SSY. adj. Free from recreation.
When a noontide sun with summer beams
Darts through a cloud, her watry skirts are edg'd
With lucid amber, or undrossy gold. Philips.
Of heav'n's undrossy gold, the gods' array Refulgent, flash'd intolerable day. Pope.

UNDUBITABLE. adj. Not admitting doubt; unquestionable.
Let that principle, that all is matter, and that there is nothing else, be received for certain and undubitable, and it will be easy to be seen, what consequences it will lead us into. Locke.

UNDUE. adj. [indue, French.]
1. Not right; not legal.
That proceeding being at that time taxed for rigorous and undue, in matter and manner, makes it very probable there was some greater matter against her. Bacon.

2. Not agreeable to duty.
He will not prostitute his power to mean and undue ends, nor stoop to little and low arts of courting the people. Atterbury.

UNDULARY. adj. [from undulo, Latin.] Playing like waves; playing with inter-missions.
The blasts and undulary breaths thereof maintain no certainty in their course. Brown.

UNDULATE. v. a. [from undulo, Lat.]
To drive backward and forward; to make to play as waves.
Breath vocalized, i. e. vibrated and undulated,
may in a different manner affect the lips, or tongue,
or palate, and impress a swift, tremulous motion, which breath alone passing smooth doth not. Holder.

UNDULATE. v. n. To play as waves in curls.
Through undulating air the sounds are sent,
And spread o'er all the fluid element. Pope.

UNDULATION. n. f. [from undulate.]
Waving motion.
Worms and leeches will move both ways; and so will most of those animals whose bodies consist of round and annular fibres, and move by undulation, that is, like the waves of the sea. Brown.
All tuneable sounds are made by a regular vibration of the sonorous body, and undulation of the air, proportionable to the acuteness and gravity of the tone. Holder.
Two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, till the undulation is quite worn out. Addison.

UNDULATORY. adj. [from undulate.]
Moving in the manner of waves.
A constant undulatory motion is perceived by looking through telescopes. Arbutnot.

not only against evil persons, but against those that are the most venerable. Sprat.

UNDUTEOUS. adj. Not performing duty;
irreverent; disobedient.
She and I, long since contracted,
Are now so sure, that nothing can dissolve us;
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or unduteous title. Shakespeare.
In Latium safe he lay,
From his unduteous son, and his usurping sway. Dryden.

UNDUTIFUL. adj. Not obedient; not reverent.
England thinks it no good policy to have that realm planted with English, lest they should grow so undutiful as the Irish, and become more dangerous. Spenser.
No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is fit for a creature not to love God; to be undutiful to his great sovereign, and ungrateful to his best benefactor. Tillotson.

UNE

UNDUTIFULLY. adv. [from undutiful.]
Not according to duty.
The fish had long in Cæsar's ponds been fed,
And from its lord undutifully fled. Dryden.

UNDUTIFULNESS. n. f. Want of respect;
irreverence; disobedience.
I should have thought they would rather have held in, and staid all the other from undutifulness, than need to be forced thereunto themselves. Spenser.
Forbidding undutifulness to superiours, sedition and rebellion against magistracy. Tillotson.

UNDY'ING. adj. Not destroyed; not perishing.
Driven down
To chains of darkness, and th' undying worm. Milton.

UNEARNED. adj. Not obtained by labour or merit.
As I am honest Puck,
If we have unearned luck,
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends ere long. Shakespeare.
Our work is brought to little, though begun
Early, and th' hour of supper comes unearn'd. Milton.
Wilt thou rather chuse
To lie supinely, hoping heaven will bless Thy slightest fruits, and give thee bread unearn'd? Philips.

They make mankind their enemy by their unjust actions, and consequently live more uneasily in the world than other men. Tillotson.

UNEASINESS. n. f. Trouble; perplexity;
state of disquiet.
Not a subject
Sits in heart-grief and uneasiness,
Under the sweet shade of your government. Shakespeare.
The same uneasiness which every thing
Gives to our nature, life must also bring. Denham.
We may be said to live like those who have their hope in another life, if we bear the uneasiness that befall us here with constancy. Atterbury.
Men are dissatisfied with their station, and create to themselves all the uneasiness of want. They fancy themselves poor, and under this persuasion feel all the disquiet of real poverty. Rogers.
His majesty will maintain his just authority over them; and whatever uneasiness they may give themselves, they can create none in him. Addison.
The libels against his grandfather, that fly about his very court, give him uneasiness. Swift.

UNEASY. adj.
1. Painful; giving disturbance.
The wisest of the Gentiles forbid any libations to be made for dead infants, as believing they passed into happiness through the way of mortality, and for a few months wore an uneasy garment. Taylor.
On a tottering pinnacle the standing is uneasy, and the fall deadly. Decay of Piety.
His present thoughts are uneasy, because his present state does not please him. L'Estrange.
Uneasy life to me,
Still watch'd and importun'd, but worse for thee. Dryden.

2. Disturbed; not at ease.
Happy low! lie down;
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown. Shakespeare.
Uneasy, justice upward flew,
And both the sisters to the stars withdrew. Dryden.
The passion and ill language proceeded from a galled and uneasy mind. Tillotson.
It is such a pleasure as makes a man restless and uneasy, exciting fresh desires. Addison.

One would wonder how any person should desire to be king of a country, in which the established religion is directly opposite to that he professes. Were it possible for such a one to accomplish his designs, his own reason might tell him, there could not be a more uneasy prince, nor a more unhappy people. Addison.

If we imagine ourselves intitled to any thing we have not, we shall be uneasy in the want of it; and that uneasiness will expose us to all the evil persuasions of poverty. Rogers.

The soul, uneasy and confin'd from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come. Pope.

3. Constraining; cramping.

Some servile imitators
Prescribe at first such strict, uneasy rules,
As they must ever slavishly observe. Roscommon.

4. Constrained; not disengaged; stiff.

In conversation, a solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, will be constrained, uneasy, and ungraceful. Locke.

5. Peevish; difficult to please.

A sour, untractable nature makes him uneasy to those who approach him. Spectator.

6. Difficult. Out of use.

We will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd: from his simplicity, I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Shakspeare.

This swift business
I must uneasy make; lest too light winning
Make the prize light. Shakspeare.

Divers things, knowable by the bare light of nature, are yet so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood, that, let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will appear obscure. Boyle.

UNE'ATEN. adj. Not devoured.

Though they had but two horses left uneaten, they had never suffered a summons to be sent to them. Clarendon.

UNE'ATH. adv. [from eath; eað, Saxon, easy.]

UNEXPANDED, adj. Not spread out.

Every fetus bears a secret hoard;
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd. Blackmore.

UNEXPECTED, adj. Not thought on; sudden; not provided against.

Have wisdom to provide always beforehand, that those evils overtake us not, which death unexpected doth use to bring upon careless men; and although it be sudden in itself, nevertheless, in regard of our prepared minds, it may not be sudden. Hooker.

Sith evils, great and unexpected, do cause oftentimes even them to think upon divine power with fearfullest suspicions, which have been otherwise the most sacred adorers thereof; how should we look for any constant resolution of mind in such cases, saving only where unfeigned affection to God hath bred the most assured confidence to be assisted by his hand? Hooker.

O unexpected stroke! worse than of death!
Must I thus leave thee, paradise? Milton.

Them unexpected joy surpriz'd,
When the great ensign of Messiah blaz'd. Milton.

U N F

Pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us, without hope of end. Milton.
What native, unextinguishable beauty must be impressed through the whole, which the defecation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth! Bentley.

UNEXTINGUISHED. adj. [inextinctus,
Latin.]

1. Not quenched; not put out.

The souls, whom that unhappy flame invades,
Make endless moans, and, pining with desire,
Lament too late their unextinguish'd fire. Dryden.
Ev'n o'er your cold, your ever-sacred urn
His constant flame shall unextinguish'd burn.
Lyttleton.

2. Not extinguishable.

An ardent thirst of honour; a soul unsatisfied

Thence shall come
To judge th' unfaithful dead; but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

UNFA'ITHFULLY. adv. Treacherously; perfidiously.

There is danger of being unfaithfully counselled;
and more for the good of them that counsel, than for him that is counselled. Bacon.

UNFA'ITHFULNESS. n. f. Treachery; perfidiousness.

As the obscurity of what some writers deliver,
makes it very difficult to be understood; so the unfaithfulness of too many others, makes it unfit to be relied on. Boyle.

UNFALLOW'D. adj. Not fallowed.

Th' unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores
Of golden wheat. Philips.

Abandon'd. Milton.

All through th' unguarded gates with joy retir'd,
To see the slighted camp, the vacant post. Donne.

U N H

No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep.

Dryden.

2. Careless; negligent; not attentive to danger.

All the evils that proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness.

Taylor.

The spy, which does this treasure keep,
Does she ne'er say her pray'rs, nor sleep?
Or have not gold and flattery pow'r
To purchase one unguarded hour?

Prior.

With an unguarded look she now devour'd
My nearer face; and now recall'd her eye,
And heav'd, and strove to hide a sudden sigh.

Prior.

It was intended only to divert a few young ladies, of good sense and good humour enough to laugh not only at their sex's little unguarded follies, but at their own.

Pope.

Are we not encompassed by multitudes, who watch every careless word, every unguarded action of our lives?

Rogers.

Part with unhack'd edges, and bear back

Our targe undinted.

Shaksp.

To UNHALLOW. v. a. To deprive of holiness; to profane; to desecrate.

Perhaps the fact

Is not so heinous now, foretasted fruit,

Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first

Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste.

Milton.

The vanity *unhallow*s the virtue.

L'Estrange.

This one use left such an indelible sacredness upon them, that the impiety of the design could be no sufficient reason to unhallow and degrade them to common use.

South.

UNHALLOWED. adj. Unholy; profane.

Thy curish spirit

Govern'd a wolf, who hang'd for human slaughter;
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet;

VOL. II.

U N H

And while thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd a dam
Infus'd itself in thee.

Shaksp.

I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that this juggler
Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes,
Obtruding false rules, prank'd in reason's garb.

Milton.

Nor shall presume to violate these hands,
Or touch thy person with unhallow'd hands.

Dryden.

Here cease thy flight, nor with unhallow'd lays Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall he throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn. Shakspere.

4. In law.

Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union: but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both, and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37 Hen. VIII. chap. 21. that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other. Union in this signification is personal, and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, whosoever is incumbent. Cowell.

UNIPAROUS. adj. [unus and pario.]

Bringing one at a birth.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous. Brown.

U'NITY. n. s. [unitas; Latin.]

1. The state of being one.

Those hereticks introduced a plurality of gods; and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolum, that should discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammond.

The production of one being the destruction of another, although they generate, they increase not; and must not be said to multiply, who do not transcend an unity. Brown.

Man is to beget
Like of his like; his image multiply'd:
In unity defective; which requires Collateral love, and dearest amity. Milton.

UNI

UNK

Whatever we can consider as one thing, suggests to the understanding the idea of unity. Locke.

2. Concord; conjunction.

That which you hear, you'll swear
You see, there is such unity in the proofs. Shakspeare.
Nor can we call those many, who endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. By this, said our Saviour, shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another; and this is the unity of charity. Pearson.

Take unity then out of the world, and it dissolves into a chaos. Holyday.

We, of all christians, ought to promote unity among ourselves and others. Sprat.

3. Agreement; uniformity.

To the avoiding of dissension, it availeth much, that there be amongst them an unity, as well in ceremonies as in doctrine. Hooker.

4. Principle of dramatick writing, by which the tenour of the story, and propriety of representation, is preserved.

The unities of time, place, and action, are exactly observed. Dryden.

Although in poetry it be absolutely necessary that the unities of time, place, and action should be thoroughly understood, there is still something more essential, that elevates and astonishes the fancy. Addison.

5. In law.

Unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles. For example, I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent; afterwards I buy the fee-simple. This is an unity of possession, whereby the lease is extinguished; by reason that I, who had before the occupation only for my rent, am become lord of the same, and am to pay my rent to none. Cowell.

UNJUDGED. adj. Not judicially determined.

Causes unjudg'd disgrace the loaded file,
And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile. Prior.

UNIVERSAL. adj. [universalis, Latin.]

To the noble mind
Rich gifts wax poor, when givers prove unkind. Shakspeare.

To Nimrod our author seems a little unkind; and says, that he against right enlarged his empire. Locke.

A real joy I never knew,
Till I believ'd thy passion true;
A real grief I ne'er can find,
Till thou prov'st perjur'd or unkind. Prior.

Or, if they serve you, serve you disinclin'd,
And, in their height of kindness, are unkind. Young.

UNKINDLY. adj. [un and kind.]

1. Unnatural; contrary to nature.

They, with their filthiness,
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Spenser.

2. Malignant; unfavourable.

The goddess, that in rural shrine
Dwell'd here with Pan, or Sylvan, by blest song Forbidding every bleak, unkindly fog
To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood. Milton.

She comes unlook'd for, if she comes at all. Pope.

To UNLOOSE. v. a. To loose. A word perhaps barbarous and ungrammatical, the particle prefixed implying negation;
so that to unloose, is properly to bind.

York, unloose your long imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart. Shaks.

The weak, wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air. Shakspeare.

Turn him to any cause of policy;
The gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter. Shakspeare.

It rested in you,
T' unloose this tied-up justice when you pleas'd.
Shakspeare.

The latchet of his shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose. Mark.

He that should spend all his time in tying inextric-able knots only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not too much to have served his generation.
Decay of Piety.

To UNLOOSE. v. n. To fall in pieces; to loose all union and connection.

Without this virtue, the publick union must un- loose; the strength decay; and the pleasure grow faint. Collier.

UNLO'SABLE. adj. [A word rarely used.]
Not to be lost.

Whatever may be said of the unlo'sable mobility of atoms, yet divers parts of matter may compose bodies that need no other cement to unite them, than the juxta position and resting together of their parts, whereby the air, and other fluids that might diffu-sate them, are excluded. Boyle.

UNLO'VED. adj. Not loved.

As love does not always reflect itself, Zelmane, though reason there was to love Palladius, yet could not ever persuade her heart to yield with that pain to Palladius, as they feel, that feel unloved love. Sidn.

What though I be not fortunate;
But miserable most, to love unlov'd! Shakspeare.

He was generally unloved, as a proud and superci-lous person. Clarendon.

deplored.
O let me here sink down
Into my grave unmention'd and unmourn'd. Southern.

To UNMUFFLE. v. a. To put off a covering from the face.
Unmuffle, ye faint stars! and thou, fair moon,
That won'tst to love the traveller's benizon,
Stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud,
And disinherit chaos, that reigns here
In double night, of darkness and of shades. Milton.

UNMUSICAL. adj. Not harmonious; not pleasing by sound.
Let argument bear no unmusical sound,
Nor jars interpose, sacred friendship to grieve. Ben Jonson.

One man's ambition wants satisfaction, another's avarice, a third's spleen; and this discord makes up the very unmusical harmony of our murmurs. Decay of Piety.

To UNMUZZLE. v. a. To loose from a muzzle.
Now unmuzzle your wisdom. Shakspeare.
Have you not set mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts
The tyrannous heart can think? Shakspeare.

end, with a direct abhorrence of the means. South.

UNOPPOS'ED. adj. Not encountered by any hostility or obstruction.

Proud, art thou met? thy hope was to have reach'd
The height of thy aspiring, unoppos'd,
The throne of God unguarded. Milton.

To every nobler portion of the town
The curling billows roll their restless tide:

In parties now they struggle up and down,
As armies, unoppos'd, for prey divide. Dryden.

The people like a headlong torrent go,
And every dam they break or overflow:
But unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.

UNO'RD'ERLY. adj. Disordered; irregular.

Since some ceremonies must be used, every man would have his own fashion; whereof what other would be the issue, but infinite distraction and un- orderly confusion in the church? Sanderfon.

UNO'RDINARY. adj. Uncommon; unusual. Not used.

I do not know how they can be excused from murder, who kill monstrous birds, because of an unordinary shape, without knowing whether they have a rational soul or no. Locke.

UNO'RGANIZED. adj. Having no parts instrumental to the motion or nourish-

UNQUESTIONABLE. adj.

1. Indubitable; not to be doubted.

The duke's carriage was surely noble throughout; of unquestionable courage in himself, and rather fearful of fame than danger. Wotton.

One reason that mathematical demonstrations are uncontroverted, is because interest hath no place in those unquestionable verities. Glanville.

There is an unquestionable magnificence in every part of Paradise Lost. Addison.

2. Such as cannot bear to be questioned without impatience: this seems to be the meaning here.

What were his marks?—
 —A lean cheek, which you have not; an unquestionable spirit, which you have not. Shaksp.

UNQUESTIONABLY. adv. Indubitably; without doubt.

If the fathers were unquestionably of the household of faith, and all to do good to them; then certainly their children cannot be strangers in this household. Sprat.

St. Austin was unquestionably a man of parts; but, interpoling in a controversy where his talent did not lie, shewed his zeal against the antipodes to very ill purpose. Burnet.

UNQUESTIONED. adj.

1. Not doubted; passed without doubt.

Other relations in good authors, though we do not positively deny, yet have they not been unquestioned by some. Brown.

2. Indisputable; not to be opposed.

It did not please the gods, who instruct the people;
 And their unquestion'd pleasures must be serv'd. Ben Jonson.

3. Not interrogated; not examined.

She muttering pray'rs as holy rites she meant,
 Through the divided crowd unquestion'd went. Dryden.

UNQUI'CK. adj. Motionless; not alive.

His senses droop, his steady eyes unquick;
 And much he ails, and yet he is not sick. Daniel.

UNQUI'CKENED. adj. Not animated; not ripened to vitality.

Every fetus bears a secret hoard,
 With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd;

Which num'rous, but unquicken'd progeny,
Clasp'd, and enwrapp'd, within each other lie.

Blackmore.

UNQUI'ET. adj. [inquiet, French; inquietus, Latin.]

1. Moved with perpetual agitation; not calm; not still.

From grammatick flats and shallows, they are on the sudden transported to be tossed and turmoiled with their unballasted wits, in fathomless and unquiet depths of controversy. Milton.

2. Disturbed; full of perturbation; not at peace.

Go with me to church, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. Shakspeare.

Thy love hopeful to regain,
From thee I will not hide
What thoughts in my unquiet breast are ris'n. Milton.

3. Restless; unsatisfied.

She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring;
A vain, unquiet, glitt'ring, wretched thing. Pope.
Mirth from company is but a fluttering, unquiet motion, that beats about the breast for a few moments, and after leaves it empty. Pope.

UNQUI'ETLY. adv. Without rest.

Who's there besides foul weather?—
—One minded like the weather, most Unquietly. Shakspeare.

UNQUI'ETNESS. n. f.

This dark design, this mystery of fate. Addison.
With Machiavelian sagacity thou unravell'd'st intrigues of state. Arbutnot.

2. To disorder; to throw out of the present order.

How can any thing succeed well with people that are to be pleased with nothing, unless the ball of the universe may be unravell'd, and the laws of Providence reversed? L'Estrange.
O the traitor's name!

I'll know it; I will: art shall be conjur'd for it,
And nature all unravell'd. Dryden and Lee.

So prophane and sceptical an age takes a pride in unravelling all the received principles of reason and religion. Tillotson.

3. To clear up the intrigue of a play.

The solution or unravelling of the intrigue commences, when the reader begins to see the doubts cleared up. Pope.

Thus supernaturally is the plot brought to perfection; nor is the unravelling of it less happily imagined. Shakspeare Illustrated.

UNRA'ZORED. adj. Unshaven.

As smooth as Hebe's their unrazor'd lips. Milton.

UNRE'ACHED. adj. Not attained.

Uncertain whose the narrower span,
The clown unread, or half-read gentleman. Dryden.

UNRE'ADINESS. n. f.

1. Want of readiness; want of promptness.

This im preparation and unreadiness when they find in us, then turn it to the soothing up of themselves in that accursed fancy. Hooker.

2. Want of preparation.

Nothing is so great an enemy to tranquillity, and a contented spirit, as the amazement and confusions of unreadiness and inconsideration. Taylor.

UNRE'ADY. adj.

1. Not prepared; not fit.

The fairy knight
Departed thence, albe his wounds wide,
Not throughly heal'd, unready were to ride. Spenser.
How now, my lords? what all unready so? Shakspeare.

2. Not prompt; not quick.

From a temperate inactivity, we are unready to put in execution the suggestions of reason; or by a content in every species of truth, we embrace the shadow thereof. Brown.

3. Awkward; ungain.

Young men, in the conduct of actions, use extreme remedies at first, and, that which doubleth all errors, will not acknowledge or retract them; like an unready horse, that will neither stop nor turn. Bacon.

UNRE'AL. adj. Unsubstantial; having only appearance.

Hence, terrible shadow!
Unreal mock'ry, hence!
I with pain
Voyag'd th' unreal, vast unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.

UNRE'ASONABLE. adj.

1. Not agreeable to reason.

No reason known to us; but that there is no reason thereof, I judge most unreasonable to imagine. Hooker.

It is unreasonable for men to be judges in their own cases; self-love will make men partial to themselves and their friends. Locke.

She entertained many unreasonable prejudices against him, before she was acquainted with his personal worth. Addison.

2. Exorbitant; claiming or insisting on more than is fit.

Since every language is so full of its own proprieties, that what is beautiful in one, is often barbarous in another, it would be unreasonable to limit a translator to the narrow compass of his author's words. Dryden.

My intention in prefixing your name, is not to desire your protection of the following papers, which

I take to be a very unreasonable request; since, by being inscribed to you, you cannot recommend them without some suspicion of partiality. Swift.

3. Greater than is fit; immoderate.

Those that place their hope in another world have, in a great measure, conquered dread of death, and unreasonable love of life. Atterbury.

UNRE'ASONABLENESS. n. f.

1. Inconsistency with reason.

The unreasonableness and presumption of those that thus project, have not so much as a thought, all their lives long, to advance so far as attrition. Hammond.

2. Exorbitance; excessive demand.

The unreasonableness of their propositions is not more evident, than that they are not the joint desires of the major number. King Charles.

A young university disputant was complaining of the unreasonableness of a lady, with whom he was engaged in a point of controversy. Addison.

UNRE'ASONABLY. adv.

1. In a manner contrary to reason.

2. More than enough.

I'll not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars.—Eye! you confine yourself most unreasonably. Shakspeare.

Seeking to hide herself as doth the deer,
That hath receiv'd some unrecuring wound.
Shakspeare.

UNREDU'CED. adj. Not reduced.

The earl divided all the rest of the Irish countries unreduced, into shires. Davies.

UNREFO'RMABLE. adj. Not to be put into a new form.

The rule of faith is alone unmoveable and unre- formable; to wit, of believing in one only God omnipotent, creator of the world, and in his son Jesus Christ, born of the virgin Mary. Hammond.

UNREFO'RMED. adj.

1. Not amended; not corrected.

This general revolt, when overcome, produced a general reformation of the Irishry, which ever before had been unreformed. Davies.

We retain the Julian constitution of the year, unreformed, without consideration of the defective minutes. Holder.

2. Not brought to newness of life.

If he may believe that Christ died for him, as now he is an unreformed christian, then what needs
he reformation? Hammond.

Unhumbled, unrepentant, unreformed. Milton.

UNREFRA'CTED. adj. Not refracted.

The sun's circular image is made by an unre- fracted beam of light. Newton.

UNREFRE'SHED. adj. Not cheered; not relieved.

Its symptoms are a spontaneous lassitude, being unrefreshed by sleep. Arbutnot.

UNREGA'RDED. adj. Not heeded; not respected; neglected.

We, ever by his might,
Had thrown to ground the unregarded right.
Spenser.

Dost see, how unregarded now

That piece of beauty passes?

There was a time when I did vow

To that alone;

But mark the fate of faces. Suckling.

On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king;

A headless carcass, and a nameless thing. Denham.

Me you have often counsel'd to remove

My vain pursuit of unregarded love. Dryden.

Laws against immorality have not been executed, and proclamations to enforce them are wholly unre- garded. Swift.

UNREGE'NERATE. adj. Not brought to a new life.

This is not to be understood promiscuously of all men, unregenerate persons as well as regenerate.
Stephens.

UNRE'GISTERED. adj. Not recorded.

Hotter hours,

Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out. Shakspeare.

UNREIN'D. adj. Not restrained by the bridle.

Left from thy flying steed unrein'd, as once

Bellerophon, though from a lower clime

Dismounted, on the Aleian field I fall. Milton.

UNRELE'NTING. adj. Hard; cruel; feeling no pity.

By many hands your father was subdued;

But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm

Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakspeare.

Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake,

That so her torture may be shortened.

Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts? Shaksp.

These are the realms of unrelenting fate;

And awful Rhadamanthus rules the state. Dryden.

False tears shall rule his unrelenting eyes,

And his glad heart with artful sighs shall heave.
Smitb.

UNRELIE'VABLE. adj. Admitting no succour.

As no degree of distress is unrelievable by his power, so no extremity of it is inconsistent with his compassion. Boyle.

UNRELIE'VED. adj.

1. Not succoured.

VOL. II,

The goddess's griev'd,
Her favour'd host should perish unreliev'd. Dryden.

2. Not eased.

The uneasiness of unrelieved thirst is not lessened by continuance, but grows the more unsupportable.
Boyle.

UNREMA'RKABLE. adj.

1. Not capable of being observed.

Our understanding, to make a complete notion,
must add something else to this fleeting and unre- markable superficialities, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby.

2. Not worthy of notice.

UNREME'DIABLE. adj. Admitting no remedy.

He so handled it, that it rather seemed he had more come into a defence of an unremediable mischief already committed, than that they had done it at first by his consent. Sidney.

UNREME'MBERED. adj. Not retained in the mind; not recollected.

I cannot pass unremembered their manner of disguising the shafts of chimnies in various fashions, whereof the noblest is the pyramidal. Wotton.

UNREME'MBERING. adj. Having no memory.

That, unrememb'ring of its former pain,
The soul may suffer mortal flesh again. Dryden.

UNREME'MBRANCE. n. f. Forgetfulness;
want of remembrance.

Some words are negative in their original language, but seem positive, because the negation is unknown; as amnesty, an unremembrance, or general pardon. Watts.

UNREMO'VEABLE. adj. Not to be taken away.

Never was there any woman, that with more un- removeable determination gave herself to love, after she had once set before her mind the worthiness of Amphialus. Sidney.

You know the fiery quality of the duke,

How unremoveable and fixt he is

In his own course. Shakspeare.

UNREMO'VEABLY. adv. In a manner that admits no removal.

His discontents are unremoveably coupled to his nature. Shakspeare.

UNREMO'VED. adj.

1. Not taken away.

piness, while the last obstacle was unremov'd.
Dryden.

2. Not capable of being removed.

Like Teneriff or Atlas unremov'd. Milton.

UNREPA'ID. adj. Not recompensed; not compensated.

Hadst thou full pow'r

To measure out his torments by thy will;

Yet what couldst thou, tormentor, hope to gain?

Thy loss continues, unrepaid by pain. Dryden.

UNREPE'AL'D. adj. Not revoked; not abrogated.

When you are pinched with any unrepeal'd act of parliament, you declare you will not be obliged by
it. Dryden.

Nature's law, and unrepeal'd command,

That gives to lighter things the greatest height.
Blackmore.

UNREPE'NTANT. } adj. Not repenting; UNREPE'NTING. } not penitent; not forrowful for sin.

Should I of these the liberty regard,

Who freed, as to their ancient patrimony,

Unhumbled, unrepentant, unreform'd,

Headlong would follow. Milton.

My unprepar'd and unrepenting breath

Was snatch'd away by the swift hand of death.
Roscommon.

All his arts reveal,

From the first moment of his vital breath,

To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.

Nor tyrants fierce, that unrepenting die,
E'er felt such rage as thou. Pope.

UNREPE'NTED. adj. Not expiated by penitential sorrow.

They are no fit supplicants to seek his mercy in the behalf of others, whose own unrepented sins provoked his just indignation. Hooker.

If I, vent'ring to displease

God for the fear of man, and man prefer,

Set God behind: which in his jealousy

Shall never, unrepented, find forgiveness. Milton.

As in unrepented sin she died,

Doom'd to the same bad place, is punish'd for her pride. Dryden.

With what confusion will he hear all his unre- pented sins produced before men and angels! Rogers.

UNREPI'NING. adj. Not peevishly complaining.

Barefoot as she trod the flinty pavement,

Her footsteps all along were mark'd with blood;

Yet silent on the pass'd, and unrepining. Rowe.

UNREPRO'VED. adj.

1. Not censured.

Christians have their churches, and unreproved exercise of religion. Sundys.

2. Not liable to censure.

The antique world, in his first flow'ring youth,

With gladsome thanks, and unreproved truth,

The gifts of sovereign bounty did embrace. Spenser.

If I give the honour due,

Mirth, admit me of thy crew,

To live with her, and live with thee,

In unreproved pleasures free. Milton.

UNREPUG'NANT. adj. Not opposite.

When scripture doth yield us natural laws, what particular order is thereunto most agreeable; when positive, which way to make laws unrepugnant unto them. Hooker.

UNRE'PUTABLE. adj. Not creditable.

When we see wise men examples of duty, we are convinced that piety is no unreputable qualification, and that we are not to be ashamed of our virtue.
Rogers.

UNREQUE'STED. adj. Not asked.

With what security can our ambassadors go, un- requested of the Turkish emperor, without his safe conduct? Knolles.

UNREQUI'TABLE. adj. Not to be retaliated.

Some will have it that all mediocrity of folly is foolish, and because an unrequitable evil may ensue, an indifferent convenience must be omitted. Brown.

So unrequitable is God's love, and so insolvent are we, that that love vastly improves the benefit, by which alone we might have pretended to some ability of retribution. Boyle.

UNRESE'NTED. adj. Not regarded with anger.

The failings of these holy persons passed not un- resented by God; and the same scripture which informs us of the sin, records the punishment. Rogers.

UNRESE'RV'D. adj.

1. Not limited by any private convenience.

The piety our heavenly Father will accept, must consist in an entire, unreserved obedience to his commands; since whosoever offends in one precept, is guilty of the whole law. Rogers.

2. Open; frank; concealing nothing.

UNRESERVEDLY. adv.

1. Without limitations.

I am not to embrace absolutely and unreservedly the opinion of Aristotle. Boyle.

2. Without concealment; openly.

I know your friendship to me is extensive; and it is what I owe to that friendship, to open my mind unreservedly to you. Pope.

UNRESERVEDNESS. n. f.

1. Unlimitedness; frankness; largeness.

The tenderness and unreservedness of his love made him think those his friends, or enemies, that were so to God. Boyle.

2. Openness; frankness.

I write with more unreservedness than ever man wrote. Pope.

UNRESISTED. adj.

1. Not opposed.

The ætherial spaces are perfectly fluid; they neither assist nor retard the planets, which roll through as free and unresisted as if they moved in a vacuum. Bentley.

2. Resistless; such as cannot be opposed.

Those gods! whose unresisted might Hath sent me to these regions void of light. Dryden.

What wonder then, thy hairs should feel The conquering force of unresisted steel? Pope.

UNRESISTING. adj. Not opposing; not making resistance.

The sheep was sacrific'd on no pretence, But meek and unresisting innocence: A patient useful creature. Dryden.

Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heavens, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones, occur, they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impressed. Bentley.

UNRESOLVABLE. adj. Not to be solved; insoluble.

For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face; still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin insatuates before it destroys. South.

UNRESOLVED. adj.

1. Not determined; having made no resolution: sometimes with of.

On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,
Unarm'd, and unresolv'd to beat them back. Shakspeare.

Turnus, unresolv'd of flight,
Moves tardy back, and just recedes from fight. Dryd.

2. Not solved; not cleared.

I do not so magnify this method, to think it will perfectly clear every hard place, and leave no doubt unresolved. Locke.

UNRESOLVING. adj. Not resolving; not determined.

She her arms about her unresolving husband threw. Dryden.

UNRESPECTIVE. adj. Inattentive; taking little notice.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys; none are for me
That look into me with considerate eyes. Shaksp.

UNREST. n. f. Disquiet; want of tranquillity; inquietness. Not in use.

Wife behest, those creeping flames by reason to subdue,

Before their rage grew to so great unrest. Spenser.

Repose, sweet gold, for their unrest,

That have their alms out of the empress' chest. Shakspeare.

Dismay'd confusion all possess'd

Th' afflicted troop, hearing their plot descry'd:

Then runs amaz'd distress, with sad unrest,

To this, to that; to fly, to stand, to hide. Daniel.

Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrows best;

For deepest wounds can least their feelings tell;

Yet, let me borrow from mine own unrest

But time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewell. Wotton.

Up they rose,

As from unrest; and each the other viewing,
Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds
How darken'd! Milton.

UNRESTORED. adj.

1. Not restored.

2. Not cleared from an attainder.

The son of an unrestored traitor has no pretences to the quality of his ancestors. Collier.

UNRESTRAINED. adj.

1. Not confined; not hindered.

My tender age in luxury was train'd,
With idle ease and pageants entertain'd;
My hours my own, my pleasures unrestrain'd. Dryden.

2. Licentious; loose.

The taverns he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained, loose companions. Shakspeare.

3. Not limited.

Were there in this aphorism an unrestrained truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution a non-usage, or abolition. Brown.

UNRETRACTED. adj. Not revoked; not recalled.

The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the saints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames. Government of the Tongue.

Nothing but plain malevolence can justify disunion; malevolence shewn in a single outward act, unretracted, or in habitual ill-nature. Collier.

UNREVEALED. adj. Not told; not discovered.

Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,
And unrevealed pleasures,
Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing. Spenser.

Dear, fatal name! rest ever unrevealed;

Nor pass these lips, in holy silence seal'd. Pope.

UNREVENGED. adj. Not revenged.

So might we die, not envying them that live;
So would we die, not unrevenged all. Fairfax.

Unhonour'd though I am,

Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.

Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,

And Scipio's ghost walks unreveng'd amongst us. Addison.

UNREVEREND. adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.

See not your bride in these unreverend robes. Shakspeare.

Fie! unreverend tongue! to call her bad,
Whose sovereignty so oft thou hast prefer'd,
With twenty thousand soul-confirming oaths. Shakspeare.

UNREVERENTLY. adv. Disrespectfully.

I did unreverently blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself. Ben Jonson.

UNREVERSED. adj. Not revoked; not repealed.

She hath offer'd to the doom,
Which unreversed stands in effectual force,
A sea of melting tears. Shakspeare.

UNREVOKED. adj. Not recalled.

Hear my decree, which unrevok'd shall stand. Milton.

UNREWARDED. adj. Not rewarded; not recompensed.

Providence takes care that good offices may not pass unrewarded. L'Estrange.

Since for the common good I yield the fair,

My private loss let grateful Greece repair;

Not unrewarded let your prince complain,

That he alone has fought, and bled in vain. Pope.

To UNRIDDLER. v. a. To solve an enigma; to explain a problem.

Some kind power unriddle where it lies,
Whether my heart be faulty, or her eyes? Suckling.

The Platonick principles will not unriddle the doubt. Glanville.

A reverse often clears up the passage of an old poet, as the poet often serves to unriddle the reverse. Addison.

UNRIDICULOUS. adj. Not ridiculous.

If an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw this austereness unto a smile, he hardly could with perpetuity resist proper motives thereof. Brown.

To UNRIG. v. a. To strip of the tackle.

Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;
Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store. Dryden.

UNRIGHT. adj. Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be untight.

What in most English writers useth to be loose, and as it were unright, in this author is well-grounded, timely framed, and strongly troffed up together. Glossary to Keats.

Shew that thy judgment is not unright. Wisd.

UNRIGHTEOUS. adj. Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.

Octavius here leapt into his room,
And it usurped by unrighteous doom;

But he his title justify'd by might. Spenser.

Within a month!

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,

She married—Oh most wicked speed! Shaksp.

Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. Isaiah.

UNRIGHTEOUSLY. adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.

For them
Their foes a deadly Shibboleth devise:

By which unrighteously it was decreed,
That none to trust or profit should succeed,

Who would not swallow first a pois'nous wicked weed. Dryden.

A man may fall undeservedly under publick disgrace, or is unrighteously oppressed. Collier.

UNRIGHTEOUSNESS. n. f. Wickedness; injustice.

Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted, than themselves. All sin, say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin. The apostle, therefore, turns it for us: all unrighteousness, says he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is unrighteousness, faith Austin upon this place. Hall.

Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Tillotson.

UNRIGHTFUL. adj. Not rightful; not just.

Thou, which know'st the way
To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again
To pluck him headlong from th' usurped throne. Shakspeare.

To UNRING. v. a. To deprive of a ring.

Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,
And pigs unring'd at vis. franc. pledge. Hudibras.

To UNRIP. v. a. [This word is improper; there being no difference between rip and unrip; and the negative particle is therefore of no force; yet it is well authorized.] To cut open.

Like a traitor
Didst break that vow, and, with thy treacherous blade, Unrip'd the bowels of thy sovereign's son. Shaksp.

He could not now, with his honour, so unrip, and put a lye upon all that he had said and done before, as to deliver him up. Bacon.

We are angry with searchers when they break open trunks, and unrip packs, and open sealed letters. Taylor.

Cato well observes, that friendship ought not to be unripped, but unstitched. Collier.

UNRIPE. adj.

1. Immature; not fully concocted.

Purpose is of violent birth, but poor validity;
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shaksp.

In this northern tract, our hoarser throats Utter unripe and ill-constrained notes. Waller.

2. Not seasonable; not yet proper.

He fix'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen. Dryden.

3. Too early.

Who hath not heard of the valiant, wife, and just Dorilaus, whose unripe death doth yet, so many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes? Sidney.

UNRIPENED. adj. Not matured.

Were you with these, you'd soon forget
The pale, unripen'd beauties of the north. Addison.

UNRIPENESS. n. f. Immaturity; want of ripeness.

The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed; and generally it is good to commit the beginnings of all great actions to Argus, with his hundred eyes; and the ends to Briareus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.

UNRIVALLED. adj.

1. Having no competitor.

Honour forbid! at whose unrival'd shrine
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign. Pope.

2. Having no peer or equal.

To UNRO'LE. v. a. To open what is rolled or convolved.

O horror!
The queen of nations, from her ancient seat,
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss;
Time has unroll'd her glories to the last,
And now clos'd up the volume. Dryden.

UNROMA'NTICK. adj. Contrary to romance.

It is a base unromantick spirit not to wait on you. Swift.

To UNROO'F. v. a. To strip off the roof or covering of houses.

The rabble should have first unroof'd the city,
Ere so prevail'd with me. Shakspeare.

UNRO'OSTED. adj. Driven from the roof.

Thou dotard! thou art woman-tir'd, unroosted,
By thy old dame Partlet here. Shakspeare.

To UNRO'OT. v. a. To tear from the roots; to extirpate; to eradicate.

Since you've made the days and nights as one,
To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold; you do so grow in my requital,
That nothing can unroot you. Shakspeare.
Unroot the forest oaks, and bear away
Flocks, folds, and trees, an undistinguish'd prey. Dryden.

UNRO'UGH. adj. Smooth.

And many unrough youths, that even now
Protest their first of manhood. Shakspeare.

UNRO'UNDED. adj. Not shaped; not cut to a round.

Those unfil'd pistols,
That more than cannon-shot avails or lets;
Which, negligently left unrounded, look Like many-angled figures in the book
Of some dread conjurer. Donne.

UNRO'YAL. adj. Unprincely; not royal.

By the advice of his envious counsellors, he sent them with unroyal reproaches to Mufidorus and Pyrocles, as if they had done traiterously. Sidney.

To UNRU'FFLE. v. n. To cease from commotion, or agitation.

Where'er he guides his finny courfers,
The waves unruffle, and the sea subsides. Dryden.

UNRU'FFLED. adj. Calm; tranquil; not tumultuous.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface. Addison.

UNRU'LED. adj. Not directed by any superiour power.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any; for they to whom she was committed, fainted in their labour, or forsook their charge. Spenser.

UNRU'LINESS. n. f. [from unruly.] Turbulence; tumultuousness; licentiousness.

By the negligence of some who were hardly to be commanded, and by the unruliness of others, who without leave were gone ashore, so fair an occasion of victory was neglected. Knolles.

No care was had to curb the unruliness of anger, or the exorbitance of desire. Amongst all their sacrifices they never sacrificed so much as one lust. South.

UNRU'LY. adj. Turbulent; ungovernable; licentious; tumultuous.

In sacred bands of wedlock ty'd
To Therion, a loose unruly swain;
Who had more joy to range the forest wide,
And chase the savage beast with busy pain. Spenser.

Down I come, like glitt'ring Phaeton, Wanting the manage of unruly jades. Shakspeare.

The best and foundest of his time hath been but rash; then must we look from his age to receive but unruly waywardness. Shakspeare.

The tongue is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. James.

Thou dost a better life, and nobler vigour give;
Dost each unruly appetite controul. Rescommon.

Love insults, disguised in the cloud,
And welcome force of that unruly crowd. Waller.

Passions kept their place, and transgressed not the boundaries of their proper natures; nor were the disorders begun, which are occasioned by the licence of unruly appetites. Glanville.

You must not go where you may dangers meet.
Th' unruly sword will no distinction make,
And beauty will not there give wounds, but take. Dryden.

UNSA'FE. adj. Not secure; hazardous; dangerous.

If they would not be drawn to seem his adversaries, yet others should be taught how unsafe it was to continue his friends. Hooker.

With speed retir'd,
Where erst was thickest fight, th' angelick throng,
And left large field, unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion. Milton.

Uncertain ways unsafe are,
And doubt a greater mischief than despair. Denham.

Phlegyan robbers made unsafe the road. Dryden.

UNSA'FELY. adv. Not securely; dangerously.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage,
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age;
So bad, that thou thyself hadst no defence
From vice, but barely by departing hence. Dryden.

As no man can walk, so neither can he think, uneasily or unsafely, but in using, as his legs, so his thoughts, amiss; which a virtuous man never doth. Grew.

UNSA'ID. adj. Not uttered; not mentioned.

Chanticleer shall with his words unsaid. Dryden.

That I may leave nothing material unsaid, among the several ways of imitation, I shall place translation and paraphrase. Felton.

UNSA'LTED. adj. Not pickled or seasoned with salt.

The muriatick scurvy, induced by too great quantity of sea-salt, and common among mariners, is cured by a diet of fresh unsalted things, and watery liquor acidulated. Arbutnot.

UNSA'LU'TED. adj. [from salutatus, Latin.] Not saluted.

Gods! I prate;
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted. Shakspeare.

UNSA'NTIFIED. adj. Unholy; not consecrated; not pious.

Her obsequies have been so far enlarged
As we have warranty; her death was doubtful;
And but that great command o'erflows the order,
She should in ground unsanctify'd have lodg'd
'Till the last trump. Shakspeare.

UNSA'TIABLE. adj. [from insatiabilis, Latin.] Not to be satisfied; greedy without bounds.

*Unsatiab*le in their longing to do all manner of good to all the creatures of God, but especially men. Hooker.

Craffus the Roman, for his unsatiable greediness, was called the gulph of avarice. Raleigh.

UNSATISFA'CTORINESS. n. f. Failure of giving satisfaction.

That which most deters me from such trials, is their unsatisfactoriness, though they should succeed. Boyle.

UNSATISFA'CTORY. adj.

1. Not giving satisfaction.

2. Not clearing the difficulty.

That speech of Adam, The woman thou gavest me to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat, is an unsatisfactory reply, and therein was involved a very impious error. Brown.

Latria to the cross, is point blank against the definition of the council of Nice; and it is an unsatisfactory answer to say, they only were against latria given to images for themselves. Stillingfleet.

UNSA'TISFIED. adj.

1. Not contented; not pleased.

Queen Elizabeth being to resolve upon a great officer, and being by some put in some doubt of that person whom she meant to advance, said, She was like one with a lanthorn seeking a man, and seemed unsatisfied in the choice of a man for that place. Bacon.

Flashy wits, who cannot fathom a large discourse, must be very much unsatisfied of me. Digby.

2. Not settled in opinion.

Concerning the analytical preparation of gold they leave persons unsatisfied. Boyle.

3. Not filled; not gratified to the full.

Though he were unsatisfied in getting,
Yet in bestowing he was most princely. Shakspeare.

Whether shall I, by justly plaguing
Him whom I hate, be more unjustly cruel
To her I love? or, being kind to her,
Be cruel to myself, and leave unsatisfied
My anger and revenge? Denham.

Eternity human nature cannot look into, without a religious awe: our thoughts are lost in the endless view, and return to us weary and unsatisfied, without finding bounds or place to fix on. Rogers.

UNSA'TISFIEDNESS. n. f. [from unsatisfied.] The state of being not satisfied.

Between my own unsatisfiedness in conscience, and a necessity of satisfying the importunities of some, I was persuaded to chuse rather what was safe, than what seemed just. King Charles.

That unsatisfiedness with transitory fruitions, that men deplore as the unhappiness of their nature, is indeed the privilege of it, as it is the prerogative of men not to be pleased with such fond toys as children doat upon. Boyle.

UNSA'TISFYING. adj. Unable to gratify to the full.

Nor is fame only unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles. Addison.

UNSA'VOURINESS. n. f. [from unsavoury.]

1. Bad taste.

2. Bad smell.

If we concede a national unsavouriness in any people, yet shall we find the Jews less subject hereto than any. Brown.

UNSA'VOURY. adj.

1. Tasteless.

Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg? Job.

2. Having a bad taste.

Unsavoury food, perhaps,
To spiritual natures. Milton.

3. Having an ill smell; fetid.

Some may emit an unsavoury odour, which may happen from the quality of what they have taken. Brown.

4. Unpleasing; disgusting.

Things of so mean regard, although necessary to be ordered, are notwithstanding very unsavoury, when they come to be disputed of; because disputation pre-supposeth some difficulty in the matter. Hooker.

Unsavoury news; but how made he escape? Shakspeare.

To UNSA'VE. v. a. To retract; to recant; to deny what has been said.

Call you me fair? that fair again unsay; Demetrius loves you, fair. Shakspeare.
Say and unsay, feign, flatter, or abjure. Milton.
How soon
Would height recall high thoughts, how soon unsay
What feign'd submission swore! Milton.
To say, and strait unsay, pretending first
To fly pain, professing next the spy,
Argues no leader, but a liar trac'd. Milton.
There is nothing said there, which you may have occasion to unsay hereafter. Atterbury.

UNSCALY. adj. Having no scales.

The jointed lobster, and unscaly sole. Gay.

UNSCARRED. adj. Not marked with wounds.

And must she die for this? O let her live:
So she may live unscarr'd from bleeding slaughter,
I will confess she was not Edward's daughter. Shakspeare.

UNSCHOLA'STICK. adj. Not bred to literature.

Notwithstanding these learned disputants, it was to the unschola'stick statesman that the world owed their peace and liberties. Locke.

Your oaths
Are words, and poor conditions but unseal'd. Shakspeare.

2. Having the seal broken.

To UNSEAM. v. a. To rip; to cut open.

He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
'Till he unseam'd him from the nape to th' chops,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements. Shakspeare.

UNSEAR'CHABLE. adj. Inscrutable; not to be explored.

All is best, though we often doubt
What th' unsearchable dispose Of highest wisdom brings about,
And ever best found in the close. Milton.

Thou hast vouchsaf'd
This friendly condescension, to relate Things else by me unsearchable. Milton.

Job discourseth of the secrets of nature, and unsearchable perfections of the works of God. Tillotson.

These counsels of God are to us unsearchable;
neither has he left us in scripture any marks, by which we may infallibly conclude ourselves in that happy number he has chosen. Rogers.

It is a vast hindrance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time among infinites and unsearchables. Watts.

UNSEAR'CHABLENESS. n. f. Impossibility to be explored.

The unsearchableness of God's ways should be a bridle to restrain presumption, and not a sanctuary for spirits of error. Bramhall.

UNSEASONABLE. adj.

1. Not suitable to time or occasion; unfit; untimely; ill-timed.

Zeal, unless it be rightly guided, when it endeavours the most busily to please God, forceth upon him those unseasonable offices which please him not. Hooker.

Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men to suspect that wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance. Hooker.

It is then a very unseasonable time to plead law,
when swords are in the hands of the vulgar. Spens.
The commissioners pulled down or defaced all images in churches, in such unseasonable fashion, as if done in hostility. Hayward.

This digression I conceived not unseasonable for this place; nor upon this occasion. Clarendon.

Haply mention may arise
Of something not unseasonable to ask. Milton.
Timothy lay out a-nights, and went abroad often at unseasonable hours. Arbutnot.

2. Not agreeable to the time of the year.

Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolv'd in tears. Shakspeare.

3. Late; as, unseasonable time of night.

UNSEASONABLENESS. n. f. Disagreement with time or place.

The moral goodness, unfitness, and unseasonableness of moral or natural actions falls not within the verge of a brutal faculty. Hale.

UNSEASONABLY. adv. Not seasonably; not agreeably to time or occasion.

Some things it asketh unseasonably, when they need not to be prayed for, as deliverance from thunder and tempest when no danger is nigh. Hooker.

Leave to fathom such high points as these,
Nor be ambitious, ere the time, to please;
Unseasonably wife, till age and cares
Have form'd thy soul to manage great affairs. Dryden.

By the methods prescribed, more good, and less mischief, will be done in acute distempers, than by medicines improperly and unseasonably applied. Arbutnot.

Ulysses yielded unseasonably, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Broome.

UNSEASONED. adj.

1. Unseasonable; untimely; ill-timed. Out of use.

Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill,
And these unseason'd hours perforce must add Unto your sickness. Shakspeare.

I think myself in a better plight for a lender than you are; the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shakspeare.

2. Unformed; not qualified by use.

'Tis an unseason'd courtier; advise him. Shakspeare.

3. Irregular; inordinate.

Him did you leave
Second to none, unseconded by you,
To look upon the hideous god of war
In disadvantage. Shakspeare.

2. Not exemplified a second time.

Strange and unseconded shapes of worms succeeded. Brown.

To UNSE'CRET. v. a. To disclose; to divulge.

He that consulteth what he should do, should not declare what he will do; but let princes beware, that the unsecreting of their affairs comes not from themselves. Bacon.

UNSE'CRET. adj. Not close; not trusty.

Who shall be true to us,
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?

UNSECURE. adj. Not safe.

Love, though most sure,
Yet always to itself seems unsecure. Denham.

UNSEDUCT. adj. Not drawn to ill.

If she remain unseclud'd, you not making it appear otherwise; for your ill opinion, and the assault you have made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your sword. Shakspeare.

Among innumerable false, unmov'd, Unshaken, unseclud'd, untir'd. Milton.

UNSEE'ING. adj. Wanting the power of vision.

I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee. Shakspeare.

To UNSEE'M. v. n. Not to seem. Not in use.

You wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseeming to confess receipt
Of that which hath so faithfully been paid. Shakspeare.

UNSEEMLINESS. n. f. Indecency; indecorum; uncomeliness.

All as before his sight whom we fear, and whose presence to offend with any the least unseemliness, we would be surely as loth as they, who most reprehend or deride that we do. Hooker.

UNSEEMLY. adj. Indecent; uncomely; unbecoming.

Contentions as yet were never able to prevent two evils; the one, a mutual exchange of unseemly and unjust disgraces offered by men, whose tongues and passions are out of rule; the other, a common hazard of both, to be made a prey by such as study how to work with most advantage in private. Hooker.

Adultery of the tongue, consisting in corrupt, dishonest, and unseemly speeches. Pertinax.

Let us now devise
What best may for the present serve to hide
The parts of each from other, that seem most
To shame obnoxious, and unseemly seen. Milton.

Her gifts
Were such, as under government well seem'd;
Unseemly to bear rule. Milton.

My sons, let your unseemly discord cease;
If not in friendship, live at least in peace. Dryden.
I wish every unseemly idea and wanton expression had been banished from amongst them. Watts.

UNSEEMLY. adv. Indecently; unbecomingly.

Charity doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own. 1 Corinthians.

Unmanly dread invades the French astonish'd;
Unseemly yelling; distant hills return
The hideous noise. Philips.

UNSEEN. adj.

1. Not seen; not discovered.

A jest unseen, inscrutable, invisible,
As a nose on a man's face, or a weathercock on a steeple. Shakspeare.

Her father and myself
Will so dispose ourselves, that seeing, unseen,
We may of the encounter frankly judge. Shakspeare.

A painter became a physician; whereupon one said to him, You have done well; for, before, the faults of your work were seen, but now they are unseen. Bacon.

Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass! Roscom.

Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth
Unseen, both when we wake, and when we sleep. Milton.

At his birth a star
Unseen before in heaven, proclaims him come;
And guides the eastern sages, who enquire
His place, to offer incense, myrrh, and gold. Milton.

On the came,
Led by her heav'nly Maker, though unseen,
And guided by his voice. Milton.

The footsteps of the deity he treads,
And secret moves along the crowded space,
Unseen of all the rude Phœacian race. Pope.

2. Invisible; undiscoverable.

The weeds of heresy being grown into ripeness, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterward freshly spring up again no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.

3. Unskilled; unexperienced.

He was not unseen in the affections of the court, but had not reputation enough to reform it. Clarendon.

UNSE'LFISH. adj. Not addicted to private interest.

The most interested cannot purpose any thing so much to their own advantage, notwithstanding which the inclination is nevertheless unselfish. Spektator.

UNSE'NT. adj.

1. Not sent.

2. UNSENT for. Not called by letter or messenger.

If a physician should go from house to house unsent for, and enquire what woman hath a cancer, or what man a fistula, he would be as unwelcome as the disease itself. Taylor.

Somewhat of weighty consequence brings you here so often, and unsent for. Dryden.

UNSE'PARABLE. adj. Not to be parted; not to be divided.

Oh world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,

Who twine as 'twere in love
Unseparable, shall, within this hour,
Break out to bitterest enmity. Shakspeare.

UNSE'PARATED. adj. Not parted.

There seek the Theban baird;
To whom Persephone, entire and whole,
Gave to retain th' unseparable soul. Pope.

UNSE'RVICEABLE. adj. Useless; bringing no advantage or convenience.

The beast, impatient of his smarting wound,
Thought with his wings to fly above the ground,
But his late wounded wing unserviceable found. Spenser.

'Tis certainly demonstrated, that the condensation and expansion of any proportion of the air, is always proportional to the weight incumbent upon it; so that, if the atmosphere had been much greater or less than it is, it would on the surface of the earth have been unserviceable for vegetation and life. Bentley.

It can be no unserviceable design to religion, to undeceive men in so important a point. Rogers.

UNSE'RVICEABLY. adv. Without use; without advantage.

It does not enlarge the dimensions of the globe, or lie idly and unserviceably there, but part of it is introduced into the plants which grow thereon; and the rest either remounts again, with the ascending vapour, or is wash'd down into rivers. Woodward.

UNSE'T. adj. Not set; not placed.

They urge that God left nothing in his word undescribed, nothing unset down; and therefore charged them strictly to keep themselves to that without any alteration. Hooker.

To UNSE'TTLE. v. a.

1. To make uncertain.

Such a doctrine unsettles the titles to kingdoms and estates; for if the actions from which such settlements spring were illegal, all that is built upon them must be so too; but the last is absurd, therefore the first must be so likewise. Arbutnot.

2. To move from a place.

As big as he was, did there need any great matter to unsettle him? L'Estrange.

3. To overthrow.

UNSE'TTLED. adj.

1. Not fixed in resolution; not determined; not steady.

A solemn air, and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains. Shakspeare.

Prepar'd I was not
For such a business; there am I found
So much unsettled. Shakspeare.

With them, a bastard of the king deceas'd,
And all th' unsettled humours of the land,
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery, voluntary. Shakspeare.

Uncertain and unsettled he remains,
Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself. Milton.

A covetous man deliberated betwixt the qualms of a wambling stomach, and an unsettled mind. L'Estrange.

Unsettled virtue stormy may appear;
Honour, like mine, serenely is severe. Dryden.

Impartially judge, whether from the very first day that our religion was unsettled, and church government flung out of doors, the civil government has ever been able to fix upon a sure foundation. South.

I know but one,
That unassailable holds on his rank,
Unshak'd of motion. Shakspeare.

UNSHA'KEN. adj.

1. Not agitated; not moved.

Purpose is
Of violent birth, but poor validity:
Which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree,
But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shakspeare.

The wicked's spite against God is but like a madman's running his head against the wall, that leaves the wall unshaken, but dashes his own brains out. Boyle.

2. Not subject to concussion.

3. Not weakened in resolution; not moved.

Ill wast thou shrouded then,
O patient Son of God! yet only stood 'st Unshaken. Milton.

Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God, in unshaken duty to his vicegerent. Sprat.

His principles were founded in reason, and supported by virtue, and therefore did not lie at the mercy of ambition: his notions were no less steady and unshaken, than just and upright. Addison.

To UNSHA'KLE. v. a. To loose from bonds.

A laudable freedom of thought unshackles their minds from the narrow prejudices of education, and opens their eyes to a more extensive view of the publick good. Addison.

UNSHA'MED. adj. Not shamed.

The brave man seeks not popular applause;
Unsham'd, though foil'd, he does the best he can:
Force is of brutes, but honour is of man. Dryden.

UNSHA'PEN. adj. Mishapen; deformed.

This unshapen earth we now inhabit, is the form it was found in when the waters had retired. Burnet.

Gasping for breath, th' unshapen Phocæ die,
And on the boiling waves extended lie. Addison.

UNSHA'RED. adj. Not partaken; not had in common.

Bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss;
Tedious unshar'd with thee, and odious soon. Milton.

To UNSHE'ATH. v. a. To draw from the scabbard.

Executioner, unsheath thy sword. Shakspeare.
Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all
Are brought to the correction of your law:
There is not now a rebel's sword unsheath'd. Shakspeare.

Far hence be souls profane!
Now, Trojan, take the way thy fates afford;
Assume thy courage, and unsheath thy sword. Dryden.

The Roman senate has resolv'd,
Till time give better prospects, still to keep
The sword unsheath'd, and turn its edge on Cæsar. Addison.

Each chief his sev'nfold shield display'd,
And half unsheath'd the shining blade. Pope.

UNSHE'D. adj. Not split.

To blood unshed the rivers must be turn'd. Milton.

UNSHE'LTED. adj. Wanting a screen; wanting protection.

He is breeding that worm, which will smite this gourd, and leave him unsheltered to that scorching wrath of God, which will make the improvement of Jonah's passionate wish, that God would take away his life, his most rational desire. Decay of Piety.

UNSHI'ELDED. adj. Not guarded by the shield.

He try'd a tough, well-chosen spear;
Though Cygnus then did no defence provide,
But scornful offer'd his unshielded side. Dryden.

To UNSHI'P. v. a. To take out of a ship.

At the Cape we landed for fresh water; but discovering a leak, we unshipped our goods, and watered there. Swift.

Tie leaded pounds to 's heels. Shakspeare.

UNSKI'LFUL. adj. Wanting art; wanting knowledge.
This overdone, or come tardy off, though it make the unskilful laugh, cannot but make the judicious grieve. Shakspeare.
Hear his sighs, though mute:
Unskilful with what words to pray, let me Interpret for him. Milton.
A man unskilful in syllogism could perceive the weakness and inconclusiveness of a long, art'ficial and plausible discourse. Locke.
Using a man's words according to the propriety of the language, though it be not always understood, leaves the blame on him who is so unskilful in the language as not to understand it when used as it ought. Locke.

UNSKI'LFULLY. adv. Without knowledge; without art.
You speak unskilfully; or, if your knowledge be more, it is much darkened in your malice. Shakspeare.

UNSKI'LFULNESS. n. s. Want of art;
want of knowledge.
The sweetness of her countenance did give such a grace to what she did, that it did make handsome the unhandsoneness, and make the eye force the mind to believe that there was a praise in that un-skilfulness. Sidney.
Let no prices be heightened by the necessity or unskilfulness of the contractor. Taylor.

UNSKI'LLED. adj. Wanting skill; wanting knowledge: with in before a noun, and to before a verb.
Unskill'd in hellebore, if thou shouldst try
To mix it, and mistake the quantity,
The rules of physick would against thee cry. Dryden.
Unskill'd and young, yet something still I writ
Of Ca'ndish beauty join'd to Cecil's wit. Prior.
Not eastern monarchs on their nuptial day
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay,
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

Poets, like painters, thus unskill'd to trace
The naked nature, and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover every part,
And hide with ornaments their want of art. Pope.

UNSLA'IN. adj. Not killed.
If there were any who felt a pity of so great a fall, and had yet any sparks of unslain duty left in them towards me, yet durst they not shew it. Sidney.
Not hecatomb unslain, nor vows unpaid,
On Greeks accurs'd this dire contagion bring. Dryden.

UNSLA'KED. adj. Not quenched.
Her desires new rous'd,
And yet unslak'd, will kindle in her fancy,
And make her eager to renew the feast. Dryden.

Mopsus the sage, who future things foretold,
And t'other seer, yet by his wife *unso*ld. Dryden.
Adieu, my children! better thus expire
Unstall'd, *unso*ld; thus glorious mount in fire. Pope.

UNSO'LDIERLIKE. adj. Unbecoming a soldier.
Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept; but even this would be *unso*ldierlike in our age. Brown.

UNSO'LD. adj. Fluid; not coherent.
The extension of body is nothing but the cohesion of solid, separable, moveable parts; and the extension of space, the continuity of *unso*lid, inseparable and unmoveable parts. Locke.

UNSO'LVED. adj. Not explicated.
Why may not a sincere searcher of truth, by labour and prayer, find out the solution of those perplexities which have hitherto been *unso*lved? Watts.
As Virgil propounds a riddle which he leaves unsolved, so I will give you another, and leave the exposition to your acute judgment. Dryden.

UNSOO'T, for unsweet. Spenser.

UNSOPHISTICATED. adj. Not adalterated; not counterfeit.
The humour and tunicles are purely transparent, to let in light and colours, unsoiled and *unso*phisticated by any inward tincture. Mare.

UNS

Blue vitriol, how venereal and unsophisticated soever, rubbed upon the whetted blade of a knife, will not impart its latent colour. Boyle.

If authors will not keep close to truth by unvaried terms, and plain, unsophisticated arguments; yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on by fallacies. Locke.

UNSO'RTED. adj. Not distributed by proper separation.

Their ideas, ever indifferent and repugnant, lie in the brain unsorted, and thrown together without order. Watts.

UNSO'UGHT. adj.

They rise unvanquish'd. Milton.

UNVA'RIBLE. adj. [invariable, French.] Not changeable; not mutable.

The two great hinges of morality stand fixt and unvariable as the two poles: whatever is naturally conducive to the common interest, is good; and whatever has a contrary influence is evil. Norris.

UNVA'RIED. adj. Not changed; not diversified.

If authors cannot be prevailed with to keep close to truth and instruction, by unvaried terms, and plain, unsophisticated arguments; yet it concerns readers not to be imposed on. Locke.

They ring round the same unvaried chimes,
With sure returns of still-expected rhymes. Pope.

UNVA'RNISHED. adj.

1. Not overlaid with varnish.

I will a round, unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs, what charms
I won his daughter with. Shakspeare.

UNVA'RYING. adj. Not liable to change.

We cannot keep by us any standing, unvarying measure of duration, which consists in a constant fleeting succession, as we can of certain lengths of extension, as inches marked out in permanent parcels of matter. Locke.

To UNVE'IL. v. a. [See VEIL and VAIL.]

1. To uncover; to divest of a veil.

The moon,
Apparent queen, unveil'd her peerless light. Milton.

To the limpid stream direct thy way,
When the gay morn unveils her smiling ray. Pope.

2. To disclose; to show.

The providence, that 's in a watchful state,
Knows almost every grain of Pluto's gold;
Does ev'n our thoughts unveil in their dumb cradles. Shakspeare.

Now unveil'd, the toilet stands display'd,
Each silver vase in mystick order laid. Pope.

UNVE'ILEDLY. adv. Plainly; without disguise.

UNU

Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unveiledly communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which had cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands that scorns to purchase knowledge with pains. Boyle.

UNVE'NTILATED. adj. Not fanned by the wind.

This, animals, to succour life, demand;
Nor should the air unventilated stand;
The idle deep corrupted would contain Blue deaths. Blackmore.

UNVE'RITABLE. adj. Not true.

All these proceeded upon unveritable grounds. Brown.

UNVE'RSED. adj. Unacquainted; unskilled.

Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day,
In dazzling gold and purple shine so gay
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd. Blackmore.

UNVE'XED. adj. Untroubled; undisturbed.

With a blest and unvex'd retire,
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruise'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shakspeare.

Unvex'd with thought of wants which may betide;
Or for to-morrow's dinner to provide. Dryden.

UNVI'OLATED. adj. Not injured; not broken.

Herein you war against your reputation,
And draw within the compass of suspect
Th' unviolated honour of your wife. Shakspeare.

He, with singular constancy, preserved his duty and fidelity to his majesty unviolated. Clarendon.

This strength diffus'd
No less through all my sinews, joints, and bones,
Than thine, while I preserv'd these locks unshorn,
The pledge of my unviolated vow. Milton.

UNVI'RTUOUS. adj. Wanting virtue.

If they can find in their hearts that the poor, unvirtuous, fat knight shall be any further afflicted, we two will be the ministers. Shakspeare.

Not this unvoyageable gulph obscure,
Detain from following thy illustrious track. Milton.

UNU'RGED. adj. Not incited; not pressed.

The time was once, when thou unurg'd wouldst
vow,
That never words were musick to thine ear,
Unless I spake. Shakspeare.

UNU'SED. adj.

1. Not put to use; unemployed.

She whose husband about that time died, forgetting the absent Plangus, or, at least, not hoping of him to attain so aspiring a purpose, left no art unused, which might keep the line from breaking, whereat the fish was already taken. Sidney.

Sure he that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike reason,
To rust in us unus'd. Shakspeare.

2. Not accustomed.

He, unused to such entertainment, did shortly and plainly answer what he was. Sidney.

One, whose eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Dropt tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakspeare.

What art thou?
Not from above; no, thy wan looks betray Diminish'd light, and eyes unus'd to day. Dryden.

UNU'SEFUL. adj. Useless; serving no purpose.

I was persuaded, by experience, that it might not be unuseful in the capacities it was intended for. Glanville.

Birds flutter with their wings, when there is but a little down upon them, and they are as yet utterly unuseful for flying. More.

As when the building gains a surer stay,
We take th' unuseful scaffolding away. Dryden.

Pleas'd to find his age
Declining, not unuseful to his lord. Philips.

UNUSUAL. adj. Not common; not frequent; rare.

With this unusual and strange course they went on, till God, in whose heaviest worldly judgments I nothing doubt but that there may lie hidden mercy, gave them over to their own inventions. Hooker.

You gain your point, if your industrious art
Can make unusual words easy and plain. Roscommon.

A sprightly red vermilion all her face;
And her eyes languish with unusual grace. Granville.

That peculiar turn, that the words shall appear new, yet not unusual, but very proper to his auditors. Felton.

The river flows redundant, and attacks
The lingering remnant with unusual tide. Philips.

UNUSUALNESS. n. f. Uncommonness; infrequency.

It is the unusualness of the time, not the appearance, that surprises Alcinous. Broome.

UNUSUALLY. adv. [from unusual.] Not in the usual manner.

UNUTTERABLE. adj. Ineffable; inexpressible.

Sighs now breath'd
Unutterable; which the spirit of prayer
Inspir'd, and wing'd for heaven with speedier flight
Than loudest oratory. Milton.

What thinks he of the happiness of another life, wherein God will fill us with unutterable joy? Kettlewell.

It wounds my soul
To think of your unutterable sorrows,
When you shall find Hippolitus was guiltless. Smith.

UNVULNERABLE. adj. Exempt from wound; not vulnerable.

The god of soldiers inform Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou may'st prove
To shame unvulnerable, and stick i' th' wars
Like a great sea mark, standing every flaw! Shakspeare.

UNWAKENED. adj. Not roused from sleep.

The more
His wonder was, to find unwaken'd Eve
With tresses discompos'd. Milton.

UNWALLED. adj. Having no walls.

He came to Tauris, a great and rich city, but unwalled, and of no strength. Knolles.

UNWA'RES. adv. Unexpectedly; before any caution, or expectation.

She, by her wicked arts,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might,
Unwares we wrought unto her wicked will. Spenser.

The deity
Hath given so many other lights and cares
To my attendant state, that well unwares
You might be hurt for me. Chapman.

His loving mother came upon a day
Unto the woods, to see her little son,
And chanc'd unwares to meet him in the way,
After his sports and cruel pastime done. Fairfax.
Still we sail, while prosperous blows the wind,
Till on some secret rock unwares we light. Fairfax.

UNWA'RILY. adv. Without caution; carelessly; heedlessly.

The best part of my powers
Were in the washes all unwarily
Devoured by the unexpected flood. Shakspeare.

If I had not unwarily engaged myself for the present publishing it, I should have kept it till I had looked over it. Digby.

By such principles, they renounce their legal claim to liberty and property, and unwarily submit to what they really abhor. Freeholder.

UNWA'RINESS. n. f. [from unwary.] Want of caution; carelessness.

The same temper which inclines us to a desire of fame, naturally betrays us into such slips and unwarinesses, as are not incident to men of a contrary disposition. Spektor.

UNWA'RLIKE. adj. Not fit for war; not used to war; not military.

He safely might old troops to battle lead
Against th' unwarlike Persian, and the Mede;
Whose hasty flight did from a bloodless field,
More spoils than honour to the victor yield. Waller.

Avert unwarlike Indians from his Rome,
Triumph abroad, secure our peace at home. Dryden.

UNWA'RNED. adj. Not cautioned; not made wary.

Unexperienced young men, if unwarned, take one thing for another, and judge by the outside. Locke.

May hypocrites,
That slyly speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwarn'd, till by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose! Philips.

UNWA'RRANTABLE. adj. Not defensible; not to be justified; not allowed.

At very distant removes an extemporary intercourse is feasible, and may be compassed without unwarrantable correspondence with the people of the air. Glanville.

He who does an unwarrantable action through a false information, which he ought not to have believed, cannot in reason make the guilt of one sin the excuse of another. South.

UNWA'RRANTABLY. adv. Not justifiably; not defensibly.

A true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, will not suffer you to rise up to that confidence, which some men unwarrantably pretend to, nay, unwarrantably require of others. Wake.

UNWA'RRANTED. adj. Not ascertained; uncertain.

The subjects of this kingdom believe it is not legal for them to be enforced to go beyond the seas, without their own consent, upon hope of an unwarranted conquest; but to resist an invading enemy, the subject must be commanded out of the counties where they inhabit. Bacon.

UNWA'RY. adj.

1. Wanting caution; imprudent; hasty; precipitate.

Nor think me so unwary,
To bring my feet again into the snare
Where once I have been caught. Milton.
So spake the false archangel, and infus'd Bad influence into th' unwary breast. Milton.

Turning short he struck with all his might Full on the helmet of th' unwary knight:
Deep was the wound. Dryden.

Propositions about religion are insinuated into the unwary as well as unbiassed understandings of children, and riveted there by long custom. Locke.

2. Unexpected. Obsolete.

All in the open hall amazed stood,
At suddenness of that unwary fight,
And wonder'd at his breathless hasty mood. Spenser.

UNWA'SHED. } adj. Not washed; not

UNWA'SHEN. } cleansed by washing.

Another lean unwash'd artificer
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death. Shakspeare.

To eat with unwashed hands defileth not a man. Matthew.

He accepts of no unclean, no unwashed sacrifice; and if repentance usher not in, prayer will never find admittance. Duppa.

When the fleece is shorn, if sweat remains Unwash'd, it soaks into their empty veins. Dryden.

UNWA'STED. adj. Not consumed; not diminished.

Why have those rocks so long unwashed stood,
Since, lavish of their stock, they through the flood
Have, ages past, their melting crystal spread,
And with their spoils the liquid regions fed? Blackmore.

UNWA'STING. adj. Not growing less; not decaying.

Purest love's unwasting treasure;
Constant faith, fair hope, long leisure;
Sacred Hymen! these are thine. Pope.

UNWA'YED. adj. Not used to travel; not seasoned in the road.

Beasts, that have been rid off their legs, are as much for a man's use, as colts that are unwaryed, and will not go at all. Suckling.

UNWE'AKENED. adj. Not weakened.

By reason of the exsuction of some air out of the glass, the elastical power of the remaining air was very much debilitated, in comparison of the unweakened pressure of the external air. Boyle.

UNWE'APONED. adj. Not furnished with offensive arms.

As the beasts are armed with fierce teeth, paws, horns, and other bodily instruments of much advantage against unweaponed men; so hath reason taught man to strengthen his hand with such offensive arms, as no creature else can well avoid. Raleigh.

UNWE'ARIABLE. adj. Not to be tired; indefatigable.

Desire to resemble him in goodness, maketh them unweariable. Hooker.

UNWE'ARIED. adj.

It unwearies and refreshes more than any thing, after too great labour. Temple.

UNWE'D. adj. Unmarried.

This servitude makes you to keep unwed. Shakspeare.

UNWE'DGEABLE. adj. Not to be cloven.

Merciful heaven!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwedgable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakspeare.

UNWEE'DED. adj. Not cleared from weeds.

Fie! 'tis an unweeded garden,
That grows to feed; things rank, and gross in nature, Possess it merely. Shakspeare.

UNWEE'PED. adj. Not lamented. Now unwept.

He must not float upon his watry bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton.

UNWEE'TING. adj. Ignorant; unknowing.

Her seeming dead he found with feigned fear,
As all unweeting of that well she knew;
And pain'd himself with busy care to rear
Her out of careless swoon. Spenser.

But contrary, unwetting he fulfill'd
The purpos'd counsel, pre-ordain'd and fix'd,
Of the most high. Milton.

UNWEIGHED. adj.

1. Not examined by the balance.

Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, because they were exceeding many. 1 Kings.

2. Not confederate; negligent.

What unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pickt out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner essay me? why, he hath not been thrice in my company. Shakspeare.

Daughter, what words have pass'd thy lips un-
weigh'd,

Deem not unjustly by my doom oppress'd,
Of human race the wisest and the best. Pope.

UNWEIGHING. adj. Inconsiderate; thoughtless.

Wife? why, no question but he was—a very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow. Shakspeare.

UNWELCOME. adj. Not pleasing; not grateful; not well received.

Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,
'Tis hard to reconcile. Shakspeare.

Soon as th' unwelcome news
From earth arriv'd at heaven-gate, displeas'd
All were who heard. Milton.

Though he that brings unwelcome news
Has but a losing office, yet he that shews
Your danger first, and then your way to safety,
May heal that wound he made. Denham.

Forc'd from her presence, and condemn'd to live;
Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd reprieve.

From the very first instances of perception, some things are grateful, and others unwelcome to them;
some things that they incline to, and others that they fly. Locke.

Such hasty nights as these, would give very un- welcome interruptions to our labours. Bentley.

UNWEPT. adj. Not lamented; not bemoaned.

Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow dolorous likewise be unwept. Shaksp.

We, but the slaves that mount you to the throne:
A base, ignoble crowd, without a name;
Unwept, unworthy of the fun'ral flame;
By duty bound to forfeit each his life. Dryden.

UNWE'T. adj. Not moist.

Once I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwet;
Yet since I have thee here in narrow room,
My tears shall set thee first afloat within thy tomb. Dryden.

UNWHIPT. adj. Not punished; not corrected with the rod.

Tremble thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged crimes
Unwhipt of justice! Shakspeare.

Once I caught him in a lie;
And then, unwhipt, he had the sense to cry. Pope.

UNWHOLESOME. adj.

1. Infalubrious; mischievous to health.

The discovery of the disposition of the air is good for the prognosticks of wholesome and unwholesome years. Bacon.

There I a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I find amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
With day-spring born; here leave me to respire. Milton.

How can any one be assured, that his meat and drink are not poisoned, and made unwholesome before they are brought to him? South.

Rome is never fuller of nobility than in summer;
for the country towns are so infested with unwhole- some vapours, that they dare not trust themselves in them while the heats last. Addison.

Children, born healthy, often contract diseases from an unwholesome nurse. Arbutnot.

2. Corrupt; tainted.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity; this gross, watry pumpkin; we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakspeare.

UNWIELDILY. adv. Heavily; with difficult motion.

Unwieldily they wallow first in ooze;
Then in the shady covert seek repose. Dryden.

UNWIELDINESS. n. f. Heaviness; difficulty to move, or be moved.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdensome corpulence, my love had grown,
But that I made it feed upon
That which love worst endures, discretion! Donne.

The supposed unwieldiness of its massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses. Glanville.

UNWIELDY. adj. Unmanageable; not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.

An ague, meeting many humours in a fat, un- wieldy body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits carried him out of the world. Clarendon.

Part, huge of bulk!
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean. Milton.

Unwieldy sums of wealth, which higher mount
Than files of marshall'd figures can account. Dryd.

Nothing here th' unwieldy rock avails,
Rebounding harmless from the plaited scales,
That, firmly join'd, preserv'd him from a wound,
With native armour crufted all around. Addison.

What carriage can bear away all the rude and un- wieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.

UNWILLING. adj. Loath; not contented; not inclined; not complying by inclination.

The nature of man is unwilling to continue doing that wherein it shall always condemn itself. Hooker.

If thou dost find him tractable,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakspeare.

If the sun rise unwilling to his race,
Clouds on his brows, and spots upon his face,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden.

Heaven's unchang'd decrees attentive hear:
More pow'ful gods have torn thee from my side,
Unwilling to resign, and doom'd a bride. Dryden.

At length I drop, but in unwilling ears,
This saving counsel, keep your piece nine years. Pope.

UNWILLINGLY. adv. Not with goodwill; not without loathness.

The whining school-boy, with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail Unwillingly to school. Shakspeare.

A feast the people hold to Dagon, and forbid
Laborious works, unwillingly this rest
Their superstition yields Milton.

Still dismay'd
By seas or skies, unwillingly they stay'd. Denham.

These men were once the prince's foes, and then Unwillingly they made him great: but now,
Being his friends, shall willingly undo him. Denham.

The dire contagion spreads so fast,
That, were it seized, all relief is vain;
And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would else the foe maintain. Dryden.

UNWILLINGNESS. n. f. Loathness; disinclination.

Obedience, with professed unwillingness to obey, is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker.

What moved the man to yield to her persuasions?
Even the same cause that hath moved all men since,
an unwillingness to grieve her, and make her sad,
lest she should pine, and be overcome with sorrow. Raleigh.

I see with what unwillingness
You lay upon me this command, and through your fears

Discern your love, and therefore must obey you. Denham.

There is in most people a reluctance and unwil- lingness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how fond they are to have an inscription over their grave. Swift.

To UNWIND. v. a. pret. and part. passive unwound.

1. To separate any thing convolved; to un-twist; to untwine.

All his subjects having by some years learned so to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have needed a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound so deeply an entered vice. Sidney.

Empirick politicians use deceit:
You boldly shew that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end;

Which should you veil, we might unwind the clue,
As men do nature, till we came to you. Dryden.

2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.

Desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as in every point to unwind themselves where the snares of glossing speech lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy. Hooker.

As you unwind her love from him,
Lest it should ravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shakspeare.

To UNWIND. v. a. To admit evolution.

Put the bottoms into clean scalding water, and they will easily unwind. Mortimer.

UNWIPED. adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.

Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found Upon their pillows. Shakspeare.

UNWISE. adj. Weak; defective in wisdom.

O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus Giv'n Hydra here to chuse an officer? Shakspeare.

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shakspeare.

He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise. Milton.

This the Greeks say, this the barbarians; the the wise and the unwise. Tilloison.

When kings grow stubborn, slothful, or unwise,
Each private man for publick good should rise. Dryden.

When the ballance of power is duly fixt in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first steps of popular encroachments. Swift.

UNWISELY. adv. Weakly; not prudently;
not wisely.

Lady Zelmane, like some, unwisely liberal, that more delight to give presents than pay debts, chose rather to bestow her love upon me, than to recompense him. Sidney.

Unwisely we the wiser east
Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.

To UNWISH. v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.

My liege, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle.—
—Why now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;

Which likes me better than to wish us one. Shaksp.

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them. Brown.

UNWISHED. adj. Not fought; not desired.

So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the inevitable Philoclea, but that her unwished presence gave my tale a conclusion, before it had a beginning. Sidney.

To his unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sov'reignty. Shaksp.

While heaping unwish'd wealth I distant roam,
The best of brothers at his natal home,
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope.

UNWIST. adj. Unthought of; not known.

To UNWIT. v. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.

Friends all but now; even now
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then but now,
As if some planet had unwitted men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breasts.

Shakspeare.

UNWITHDRAWING. adj. Continually liberal.

Wherefore did Nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks?

Milton.

UNWITHSTOOD. adj. Not opposed.

Cressly plains,
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silures vigour unwithstood
Could do in rigid fight.

Philips.

UNWITNESSED. adj. Wanting testimony; wanting notice.

Left their zeal to the cause should any way be unwitnessed.

Hooker.

UNWITTINGLY. adv. [Properly unweetingly, from unweeting.] Without knowledge; without consciousness.

In these fatal things it falls out that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly accessary to their determinations.

Sidney.

Those things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly, as the heavens and elements of the world, which can do no otherwise than they do.

Hooker.

Atheists repudiate all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquillity they seek for.

Bentley.

UNWONTED. adj.

1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent;

His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure th' unwonted sun to view.

Spens.

My father's of a better nature

Than he appears by speech; this is unwonted

Which now came from him.

Shakspeare.

Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick.

Glarville.

Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart,

All signs of some unwonted change appear.

Dryden.

2. Unaccustomed; unused.

Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefacedness pleasant, and pleasure shame-faced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground.

Sidney.

Sea calves unwonted to fresh waters fly.

May.

O how oft shall he

On faith and changed gods complain; and seas,

Rough with black winds and storms,

Unwonted shall admire.

Milton.

UNWO'RKING. adj. Living without labour.

Lazy and unworking shopkeepers in this being worse than gamesters, do not only keep so much of the money of a country in their hands, but make the publick pay them for it.

Locke.

UNWO'RSHIPPED. adj. Not adored.

He resolv'd to leave

Unworshipp'd, unobey'd, the throne supreme.

Milton.

UNWO'RTHILY. adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.

I vow'd, base knight,

To tear the garter from thy craven leg,

Which I have done, because unworthily

Thou wast installed.

Shakspeare.

Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,

And so unworthily disgrace the man,

I gave him gentle looks.

Shakspeare.

If we look upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments of poetry.

Broome.

UNWO'RTHINESS. n. s. Want of worth;

want of merit.

A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner.

Sidney.

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong,
as to think where it is placed, embraced, and loved,
there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest mist is not easilier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with so high thoughts.

Sidney.

Every night he comes with songs compos'd

To her unworthiness: it nothing steals us

To chide him from our eaves, for he persists.

Shakspeare.

I fear'd to find you in another place;

But, since you 're here, my jealousy grows less:

You will be kind to my unworthiness.

Dryden.

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some.

Wake.

UNWO'RTHY. adj.

1. Not deserving: whether good or bad.

The Athanasian creed and doxology should remain in use; the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard sounding, as they are in the church of Christ.

Hooker.

Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over.

Knolles.

2. Wanting merit.

Degree being vizarded,

Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask.

Shakspeare.

Are there unworthy men chosen to offices?

Whitgift.

So may I, blind fortune leading me,

Miss that which one unworthier may attain;

And die with grieving.

Shakspeare.

3. Mean; worthless; contemptible.

Tell me, Philoclea, did you ever see such a shepherd? did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me?

Sidney.

4. Not suitable; not adequate.

I laid at her feet a work, which was unworthy
her, but which I hope she will forgive.

Dryden.

Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him.

Pope to Swift.

Care is taken to intersperse additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be bought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author.

Swift.

5. Unbecoming; vile.

The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:

Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,

He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid.

Dryden.

UNWO'UND. pret. and part. pass. of unwind. Untwisted.

Thatchers tie with withs, but old pitched ropes

unwound are more lasting.

Mortimer.

UNWO'UNDED. adj.

1. Not wounded.

We may offend

Our yet unwounded enemies.

Milton.

2. Nor hurt.

Oh blest with temper!

She who can love a sister's charms, or hear

Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear.

Pope.

To UNWRA'P. v. a. To open what is folded.

To UNWRE'ATH. v. a. To untwine.

The beards of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air.

Boyle.

character of an author.

The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molested.

Arbutnot.

UNWRI'TTEN. adj.

1. Not written; not conveyed by writing;

oral; traditional.

A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another.

Spenser.

The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and the unwritten.

Hale.

2. Not containing writing.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude, unwritten blank; making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born.

South.

UNWRO'UGHT. adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.

Or prove at least to all of wiser thought,

Their hearts were fertile land, although unwrought.

Fairfax.

Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command;

Unwrought and easy to the potter's hand:

Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel

The first sharp motions of the forming wheel.

Dryden.

UNWRU'NG. adj. Not pinched.

We that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade winch, our withers are unwring.

Shakspeare.

UNYIELD'D. adj. Not given up.

O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the ground,

Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound.

Dryden.

To UNYO'KE. v. a.

1. To loose from the yoke.

Our army is dispers'd already:

Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course

East, west, north, south.

Shakspeare.

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them

the employment of slaves; they unyoke the mules.

Broom.

2. To part; to disjoin.

Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,

So join'd in love, so strong in both,

Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret?

Shakspeare.

UNYO'KED. adj.

1. Having never worn a yoke.

Sev'n bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chuse,

And for Diana sev'n unspotted ewes.

Dryden.

2. Licentious; unrestrained.

I will awhile uphold

The unyok'd humour of your idleness.

Shakspeare.

UNZO'NED. adj. Not bound with a girdle.

Full, though unzon'd her bosom.

Prior.

VOCABULARY. n. s. [vocabularium, Lat. vocabulaire, French.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a wordbook.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which signify nothing, not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan.

Broom.

Among other books, we should be furnished with vocabularies and dictionaries of several sorts.

Watts.

VOCAL. adj. [vocal, French; vocalis,
Latin.]

1. Having a voice.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;

And there be words not made with lungs;

Sententious show'rs! O let them fall!

Their cadence is rhetorical.

Cressano.

Witness if I be silent, morn or even,

To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade,

Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.

Milton.

Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds.

That strain I heard was of a higher mood.

Milton.

None can animate the lyre,

And the mute strings with vocal souls inspire,

As Helen, in whole eyes ten thousand cupids dwell.

Dryden.

Memnon, though stone, was counted vocal;

But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all.

Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,

With prompting priest behind the hanging.

Prior.

2. Uttered or modulated by the voice.

They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental musick, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must shew some reason wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony, and not the other.

Hooker.

They join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton.

VOCALITY. n. f. [vocalitas, Latin; from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.

L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocality, are not easy in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced spirally. Holder.

TO VOCALIZE. v. a. [from vocal.] To form into voice.

It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone; another thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx to give it the sound of human voice. Holder.

VOCALLY. adv. [from vocal.] In words; articulately.

Although it is as natural to mankind to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal signs; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of institution. Hale.

VOCATION. n. f. [vocation, French; vocatio, Latin.]

1. Calling by the will of God.

Neither doth that which St. Paul, or other apostles, teach, enforce the utter disability of any other men's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls. Hooker.

They which thus were in God eternally by their intended admission to life, have, by vocation or adoption, God actually now in them. Hooker.

2. Summons.

What can be urged for them, who not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of meer wantonness make themselves ridiculous? Dryden.

3. Trade; employment; calling.

He would think his service greatly rewarded, if he might obtain by that means to live in the sight of his prince, and yet practise his own chosen vocation. Sidney.

God's mother, in a vision full of majesty, Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakspeare.

God has furnished men with faculties sufficient to direct them in the way they should take, if they will seriously employ them, when their ordinary vocations allow them the leisure. Locke.

4. It is used ironically in contempt.

But lest you should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rake,
Or when a whore in her vocation
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

Thrice three vociferous heralds rose to check the rout. Chapman.

Several templars, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to hiss, and confessed they were forced to laugh. Pope.

VOGUE. n. f. [vogue, French; from voguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode; popular reception.

It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than to vouch a man's saintship from the vogue of the world. South.

Use may revive the obsoletest words,
And banish those that now are most in vogue. Roscommon.

What factions th' have, and what they drive at
In public vogue, or what in private. Hudibras.

In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to. L'Estrange.

VOL. II.

No periodical waiter, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time. Addison.

At one time they keep their patients so close and warm, as almost to fuddle them; and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker.

VOICE. n. f. [voix, French; vox, voxis, Latin.]

1. Sound emitted by the mouth.

I assay to see

The works of men; or heare mortalitie Expire a voice. Chapman.

2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.

Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices. Bacon.

3. Any sound made by breath.

O Marcus, I am warm'd; my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.

4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.

Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. Shakspeare.

I've no words;

My voice is in my sword! thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out. Shakspeare.

The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and must shortly perish, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few; for two hundred gave voices, reducing that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of greatest gravity. Knolles.

Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.

5. Language; words; expression.

Let us call on God in the voice of his church. Fell.

Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or pliancy, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies. Bacon.

Of volatility the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning. Bacon.

Heat causeth the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals. Bacon.

The animal spirits cannot, by reason of their subtilty and volatileness, be discovered to the sense. Hale.

The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much bigger; nor may they be much less, lest they lose their opacity. Newton.

By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, in which the odour or smell consists. Arbutnot.

2. Mutability of mind; airiness; liveliness.

VO'LATILIZA'TION. n. f. [from volatilize.] The act of making volatile.

Chymists have, by a variety of ways, attempted in vain the volatilization of the salt of tartar. Boyle.

To VO'LATILIZE. v. a. [volatiliser, Fr. from volatile.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.

Spirit of wine has a refractive power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation: the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton.

Spirituous liquors are so far from attenuating, volatilizing, and rendering perspirable the animal fluids, that they rather condense them. Arbutnot.

VOLCA'NO. n. f. [Italian, from Vulcan.]

A burning mountain.

Navigators tell us there is a burning mountain in an island, and many volcanos and fiery hills. Brown.

When the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
From the volcanos grofs eruptions rise,
And curling sheets of smoke obscure the skies. Garth.

Subterraneous minerals ferment, and cause earthquakes, and cause furious eruptions of volcanos, and tumble down broken rocks. Bentley.

Why want we then encomiums on the storm,
Or famine, or volcanos? They perform
Their mighty deeds; they hero-like can slay,
And spread their ample deserts in a day. Young.

VOLE. n. f. [vole, French.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks.

Past six, and not a living soul!
I might by this have won a vole. Swift.

VO'LERY. n. f. [volerie, French.] A flight of birds.

An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery; amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him. Locke.

VOLITA'TION. n. f. [volito, Latin.] The act or power of flying.

Birds and flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation. Brown.

VOLI'TION. n. f. [volitio, Latin.] The act of willing; the power of choice exerted.

To say that we cannot tell whether we have liberty, because we do not understand the manner of volition, is all one as to say, that we cannot tell whether we see or hear, because we do not understand the manner of sensation. Wilkins.

There is as much difference between the approbation of the judgment, and the actual volitions of the will, as between a man's viewing a desirable thing with his eye, and reaching after it with his hand. South.

Volition is the actual exercise of the power the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance. Locke.

VO'LITIVE. adj. Having the power to will.

They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive; making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better. Hale.

More on his guns relies than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd. Waller.

2. A burst; an emission of many at once.

A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off. Shakespeare.

Diffident sense with modest caution speaks;
It still looks home, and short excursions makes;
But rattling nonsense in full vollies breaks. Pope.

To VO'LLY. v. n. To throw out.

The holding every man shall beat as loud
As his strong sides can volley. Shakespeare.

VO'LLIED. adj. [from volley.] Disploded; discharged with a volley.

I flood

Thy fiercest, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting volley'd thunder made all speed. Milton.

The Gallick navy, impotent to bear
His volley'd thunder, torn, dis sever'd, scud. Philips.

VOLT. n. f. [volte, French.]

Volt signifies a round or a circular tread; a gate of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center; so that these two treads make parallel tracks, the one which is made by the fore feet larger, and the other by the hinder feet smaller; the shoulders bearing outwards, and the croupe approaching towards the center. Farrier's Dict.

VOLUBILITY. n. f. [volubilité, French; volubilitas, from volubilis, Latin.]

1. The act or power of rolling.

Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl, and is derived from its roundness. Watts.

Then celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker.

2. Activity of tongue; fluency of speech.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakespeare.

He expressed himself with great volubility of words, natural and proper. Clarendon.

He had all the French assurance, cunning, and volubility of tongue. Addison.

She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father. Female Quixote.

3. Mutability; lability; to revolution.

He that's a victor this moment, may be a slave the next; and this volubility of human affairs, is the judgment of providence, in the punishment of oppression. L'Estrange.

VO'LUBLE. adj. [volubilis, Latin.]

1. Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.

Neither the weight of the matter of which a cylinder is made, nor its round voluble form, which, meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that dead, choiceless creature in its first motion. Hammond.

The adventitious corpuscles may produce stability in the matter they pervade, by expelling thence those voluble particles, which, whilst they continued, did by their shape unfit for cohesion, or by their motion, oppose coalition. Boyle.

2. Rolling; having quick motion.

This left voluble earth,
By shorter flight to th' east, had left him there. Milton.

Then voluble and bold; now hid, now seen,
Among thick-woven arborets. Milton.

3. Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.

A friend promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble and flippant. Addison.

These, with a voluble and flippant tongue, become mere echoes. Watts.

4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.

Cassio, a knave very voluble; no further consciousable, than in putting on the meer form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his loose affection. Shakespeare.

If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd, Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard. Shakespeare.

VO'LUME. n. f. [volumen, Latin.]

1. Something rolled, or convolved.

2. As much as seems convolved at once; as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.

Threescore and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I've seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange. Shakespeare.

Unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.

Behind the gen'ral mends his weary pace;
And silently to his revenge he sails:

So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.

Thames' fruitful tides
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play.

Fenton.

By the insinuations of these crystals, the volumes of air are driven out of the watry particles, and many of them uniting, form larger volumes, which thereby have a greater force to expand themselves. Cheyne.

3. [volume, French.] A book; so called, because books were anciently rolled upon a staff.

Guyon all this while his book did read,

Ne yet has ended; for it was a great

And ample volume, that doth far exceed

My leisure, so long leaves here to repeat. Spenser.

Calmly, I do beseech you.

Aye, as an hostler, that for the poorest piece

Will bear the name by th' volume. Shakspeare.

The most sagacious man is not able to find out any blot or error in this great volume of the world.

Wilkins.

I shall not now enlarge on the wrong judgments whereby men mislead themselves. This would make a volume.

Locke.

If one short volume could comprize

All that was witty, learn'd, and wise,

How would it be esteem'd and read?

Swift.

VOLUMINOUS, adj. [from volume.]

1. Consisting of many complications.

The serpent roll'd voluminous and vast. Milton.

2. Consisting of many volumes, or books.

If heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars

Voluminous, or single characters

In their conjunction met, give me to spell. Milton.

There is pleasure in doing something new, though never so little, without pestering the world with voluminous transcriptions. Graunt.

The most severe reader makes allowances for many rests and nodding-places in a voluminous writer. Spektator.

3. Copious; diffusive.

He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.

VOLUMINOUSLY, adv. [from voluminous.] In many volumes or books.

The controversies are hotly managed by the divided schools, and voluminously every where handled. Granville.

VOLUNTARILY, adv. [volontiers, French; from voluntary.] Spontaneously; of one's own accord; without compulsion.

Sith there is no likelihood that ever voluntarily they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation itself must seek them. Hooker.

To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, is against God and nature. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily, and by choice, to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

VOLUNTARY, adj. [volontaire, Fr. voluntarius, Latin.]

1. Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.

God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent; intending before-hand, and decreeing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him. Hooker.

The lottery of my destiny

Bars me the right of voluntary chusing. Shakspeare.

2. Willing; acting with willingness.

Then virtue was no more; her guard away,

She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope.

3. Done by design; purposed.

If a man be lopping a tree, and his ax-head fall from the helve, out of his hand, and kills another passing by, here is indeed man-slaughter, but no voluntary murder. Perkins.

4. Done without compulsion.

Voluntary forbearance denotes the forbearance of an action, consequent to an order of the mind. Locke.

The old duke is banished; the new duke, and three or four loving lords, have put themselves into voluntary exile with him. Shakspeare.

They must have recourse to abstinence, which is but voluntary fasting, and to exercise, which is but voluntary labour. Seed.

5. Acting of his own accord; spontaneous.

The publick prayers of the people of God, in churches thoroughly settled, did never use to be voluntary dictates, proceeding from any man's extemporal wit. Hooker.

Thoughts which voluntary move

Harmonious numbers. Milton.

VOLUNTARY, n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.

All the unsettled humours of the land;

Rash, inconfid'rate, fiery voluntaries. Shakspeare.

Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress. Shakspeare.

The bordering wars were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head. Dawies.

Aids came in partly upon missives, and partly voluntaries from all parts. Bacon.

2. A piece of musick played at will, without any settled rule.

Whistling winds like organs play'd,

Until their voluntaries made

The waken'd earth in odours rise,

To be her morning sacrifice. Cleaveland.

By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepared for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive. Spektator.

VOLUNTEER, n. s. [voluntaire, French.]

A soldier who enters into the service of his own accord.

Congreve, and the author of the Relapse, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them; as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the misfortune of their friends. Collier.

All Asia now was by the ears;

And gods beat up for volunteers

To Greece and Troy. Prior.

TO VOLUNTEER, v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.

Leave off these wagers, for in conscience speaking, The city needs not your new tricks for breaking:

And if you gallants lose, to all appearing,

You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOLUPTUARY, n. s. [voluptuaire, Fr. voluptuarius, Latin.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.

Does not the voluptuary understand, in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluptuaries; men who lived like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterbury.

VOLUPTUOUS, adj. [voluptuosus, Lat. voluptueux, French.] Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

He them deceives; deceiv'd in his deceit;

Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt. Spenser.

If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread. The one is, the supplanting, or the opposing of authority established; the other is, the giving licence to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bacon.

Thou wilt bring me soon

To that new world of light and bliss, among

The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign

At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Milton.

Then swol'n with pride, into the snare I fell

Of fair fallacious looks; venereal trains,

Softened with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milton.

Speculative atheism subsists only in our speculation; whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley.

VOLUPTUOUSLY, adv. [from voluptuous.]

Luxuriously; with indulgence of excessive pleasure.

Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakspeare.

This cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or voluptuously disposed, as never to suffer me to think of them; but perpetually to carry away and apply my mind to other things. South.

VOLUPTUOUSNESS, n. s. [from voluptuous.] Luxuriousness; addictedness to excess of pleasure.

There's no bottom

In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters, Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up The cistern of my lust. Shakspeare.

If he fill'd his vacancy with his voluptuousness, Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,

Call on him for 't. Shakspeare.

Here, where still ev'ning is, not noon nor night;

Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Donne.

These sons of Epicurus, for voluptuousness and irreligion, must pass for the only wits of the age. South.

You may be free, unless

Your other lord forbids, voluptuousness. Dryden.

VOLUTATION, n. s. [volutatio, Latin.]

Wallowing; rolling.

VOOLUTE, n. s. [volute, French.] A member of a column.

That part of the capitals of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head-dresses of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stems in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionick, and eight in the Composite. These *volute*s are more especially remarkable in the Ionick capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and echinus: whence that ancient architect calls the voluta pulvinus. Harris.

It is said there is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Transfereve, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learnt from thence the working of that difficult problem. Addison.

VO' MICA, n. s. [Latin.] An encysted tumour in the lungs.

If the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vomica, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema; because the vomica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily avoid some of the putrid matter, and taint the blood. Arbutnot.

VO'MICK NUT, n. s.

Vomick nut is the nucleus of a fruit of an East-Indian tree, the wood of which is the lignum colubrinum, or snakewood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown-piece. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds; and taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions. Hill.

TO VO'MIT, v. n. [vomo, Lat.] To cast up the contents of the stomach.

The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, know his cure, falls to his grass, vomits, and is well. More.

TO VO'MIT, v. a. [vomir, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stomach: often with up or out.

As though some world unknown,

By pamper'd nature's store too prodigally fed,

And surfeiting therewith, her surcrease vomited. Drayton.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land. Jonah.

Vomiting is of use, when the foulness of the stomach requires it. Wiseman.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar. Arbutnot.

2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.

VO'MIT, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,

Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Saunders.

2. An emetick medicine; a medicine that causes vomits.

This vomit may be repeated often, if it be found successful. Blackmore.

Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances: if there be any symptoms of an inflammation on the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous. Arbutnot.

VOMITION. n. f. [from vomo, Lat.] The act or power of vomiting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch! Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died. Grew.

VO'MITIVE. adj. [vomitif, Fr.] Emetick; causing vomits.

From this vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitive, occasion black ejections. Brown.

VO'MITORY. adj. [vomitore, Fr. vomitarius, Lat.] Procuring vomits; emetick.

Since regulus of stibium, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitory operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight. Brown.

Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, short, blunt pins, which, by straining, they vomit up again, or by taking vomitories privately. Harvey.

VORACIOUS. adj. [vorace, Fr. vorax, Latin.]

1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; edacious.

So voracious is this humour grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it. Govern. of the Tongue.

2. Rapacious; greedy.

VORACIOUSLY. adv. [from voracious.] Greedily; ravenously.

VORACIOUSNESS. n. f. [voracit  , Fr. voracitas, Lat. from voracious.]

Greediness; ravine; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth pamper their voracities. Sandys.

Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham.

VO'RTEX. n. f. In the plural vortices. [Latin.] Any thing whirled round.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these, and all their parts, would by their tenacity and stiffness communicate their motion to one another. Newton.

Nothing else could impel it, unless the etherial matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets. Bentley.

The gathering number, as it moves along, involves a vast involuntary throng; Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less, Roll in her vortex, and her power confests. Pope.

VO'RTICAL. adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time. Newton.

It is not a magnetical power, nor the effect of a vortical motion; those common attempts towards the explication of gravity. Bentley.

VO'TARIST. n. f. [devotus, Lat.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship; votary.

I wish a more strict restraint Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of St. Clare. Shakspeare.

Earth, yield me roots! What is here? Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold! No, gods, I am no idle votarist. Shakspeare.

The grey-hooded ev'n,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

VO'TARY. n. f. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee?
Thou art a votary to fond desire. Shakspeare.

Thou, faint god of sleep! forget that I
Was ever known to be thy votary.
No more my pillow shall thine altar be,
Nor will I offer any more to thee Myself a melting sacrifice. Craslow.

'Twas the coldness of the votary, and not the prayer, that was in fault, whenever fervor was deficient at the publick office of the church. Fell.

By these means, men worship the idols which have been set up in their minds, and stamping the characters of divinity upon absurdities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and monkeys. Locke.

The enemy of our happiness has servants and votaries among those who are called by the name of the son of God. Rogers.

How can heav'nly wisdom prove
An instrument to earthly love?
Know'st thou not yet, that men commence Thy votaries for want of sense? Swift.

VO'TARY. adj. Consequent to a vow.

Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bacon.

VO'TARESS. n. f. [female of votary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial vot'ress passed on
In maiden meditation, fancy free. Shakspeare.

His mother was a vot'ress of my order;
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakspeare.

No rosary this vot'ress needs,
Her very syllables are beads. Cleveland.

Thy vot'ress from my tender years I am;
And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game. Dryden.

What force have pious vows? the queen of love
His sister sends, her vot'ress from above. Pope.

VOTE. n. f. [votum, Latin.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.

He that joins instruction with delight,
Profit with pleasure, carries all the votes. Roscom.

How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the supposed honesty or learning of those of the same profession! as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude. Locke.

The final determination arises from the majority of opinions or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be swayed by the superiour weight of reason. Watts.

To VOTE. v. a.

1. To choose by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.

You are not only in the eye and ear of your master, but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and so are in his bosom also; the world hath also voted you, and doth so esteem of you. Bacon.

2. To give by vote.

The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds, by way of recompence for their sufferings. Swift.

VO'TER. n. f. [from vote.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Elections growing chargeable, the voters, that is, the bulk of the common people, have been universally seduced into bribery, perjury, drunkenness, malice, and slander. Swift.

He hates an action base;
Can sometimes drop a voter's claim,
And give up party to his fame. Swift.

VO'TIVE. adj. [votivus, Lat.] Given by vow.

Such in Isis' temple you may find,
On votive tablets to the life pourtray'd. Dryden.
Venus! take my votive glass;
Since I am not what I was,

What from this day I shall be,
Venus! let me never see. Prim.

To VOUCH. v. a. [voucher, Norman Fr.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest.

The sun and day are witnesses for me;
Let him who fights unseen relate his own,
And vouch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden.

2. To attest; to warrant; to declare; to maintain by repeated affirmations.

You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis making, 'Tis given with welcome. Shakspeare.

The consistency of the discourse, and the pertinency of it to the design he is upon, vouches it worthy of our great apostle. Locke.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it. Atterbury.

To VOUCH. v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness; to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe her, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so solemnly affirmed. Swift.

VOUCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Warrant; attestation.

What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself? Shakspeare.

VO'UCHER. n. f. [from vouch.]

1. One who gives witness to any thing.

All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator.

I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them; which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost. Pope.

2. Testimony.

Better to starve,
Than crave the hire which first we do deserve:
Why in this wolfish gown should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear
Their needless voucher? Shakspeare.

The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, i. e. has so much silver in it. Locke.

To VOUCHSAFE. v. a. [vouch and safe.]

1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.

2. To condescend to grant.

He grew content to mark their speeches, then marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference. Sidney.

Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?—
Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll Vouchsafe thee hearing. Shakspeare.

But if the sense of touch seem such delight
Beyond all other, think the same vouchsaf'd
To cattle and each beast. Milton.

It is not said by the apostle, that God vouchsafed to the heathens the means of salvation; and yet I will not affirm that God will save none of those, to whom the sound of the gospel never reached. South.

To VOUCHSAFE. v. n. To deign; to condescend; to yield.

Do I not see Zelmane, who does not think a thought which is not first weighed by wisdom and virtue? doth not she vouchsafe to love me with like ardour? Sidney.

Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed crimes to give me leave
By circumstance but to acquit myself. Shakspeare.

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
What pow'r the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.

VOUCHSAFE. n. f. [from vouchsafe.] Grant; condescension.

The infinite superiority of God's nature, places a vast disparity betwixt his greatest communicated vouchsafements, and his boundless, and therefore to his creatures incommunicable, perfections. Bogis.

VOW. n. f. [v  u, Fr. votum, Lat.]

1. Any promise made to a divine power;

VOY

an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions, is consecrated to a particular purpose.

The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows; They are polluted offerings. Shakspeare.

Where honour or where conscience does not bind, No other law shall shackle me, Slave to myself I will not be,

Nor shall my future actions be confin'd By my own present mind.

Who by resolves or vows engag'd does stand For days that yet belong to fate,

Does, like an unthrif, mortgage his estate Before it comes into his hand.

The bondman of the cloister so

All that he does receive does always owe; And still, as time comes in, it goes away,

Not to enjoy, but debts to pay.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,

Which his hour's work, as well as hours, does tell;

Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

If you take that vow and that wish to be all one, you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow. Hammond.

She vows for his return with vain devotion pays. Dryden.

2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.

By all the vows that ever men have broke, In number more than ever woman spoke. Shakspeare.

Those who wear the woodbine on their brow, Were knights of love, who never broke their vow; Firm to their plighted faith. Dryden.

To Vow. v. a. [vouer, Fr. voweo, Lat.]

1. To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.

David often voweth unto God the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving in the congregation. Hooker.

Vow and pay unto the Lord. Psalms.

When we have not only vowed, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his publick worship, and the ministers thereof, they are not now arbitrable, nor to be revoked. Spelman.

Whoever sees these irreligious men, With burden of a sickness, weak and faint, But hears them talking of religion then, And vowing of their soul to ev'ry saint. Davies.

This plant Latinus, when his town he wall'd, Then found, and from the tree Laurentum call'd: And last, in honour of his new abode, He vow'd the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden.

2. To devote: a ceremonial phrase.

To master Harvey, upon some special consideration, I have vowed this my labour. Spenser.

To Vow. v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.

Doft see how unregarded now That piece of beauty passes?

There was a time, when I did vow

To that alone; but mark the fate of faces. Suckling.

VO'WED. part. pass. [from the verb.] Consecrated by solemn declaration.

VO'WEL. n. f. [voyelle, Fr. vocalis, Lat.] A letter which can be uttered by itself.

I distinguish letters into vowels and consonants, yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel, which will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel, as, bl, ft; and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, riddle. Holder.

Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Broome.

VOWFE'LLow. n. f. [vow and fellow.]

One bound by the same vow.

Who are the votaries,

That are vowefollows with this virtuous king? Shakspeare.

VO'YAGE. n. f. [voyage, French.]

1. A travel by sea.

Guyon forward gan his voyage make, With his black palmer, that him guided still. Spenser.

Our ships went sundry voyages, as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantic and Mediterranean seas. Bacon.

This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage; contented to sit in the cabin when the winds were allayed, but ready to resume the helm when the storm arose. Prior.

2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakspeare.

If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail, I am no further your enemy. Shakspeare.

3. The practice of travelling.

All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon.

To VO'YAGE. v. n. [voyager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel by sea.

For, voyaging to learn the direful art, To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart; Thus refus'd t' impart the baneful trust. Pope.

To VO'YAGE. v. a. To travel; to pass over.

I with pain Voyag'd th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep Of horrible confusion. Milton.

VO'YAGER. n. f. [voyageur, Fr. from voyage.] One who travels by sea.

Disdain not in thy constant travelling To do as other voyagers, and make Some turns into less creeks, and wisely take Fresh water at the Heliconian spring. Donne.

How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell. Cheyne.

Deny your vessels, ye deny in vain; A private voyager I pass the main. Pope.

UP. adv. [up, Sax. op, Dutch and Danish.]

1. Aloft; on high; not down.

From those two brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things; now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knolles.

Thither his course he bends; but up or down, By center, or eccentric, hard to tell, Or longitude. Milton.

2. Out of bed; in the state of being risen from rest.

Helen was not up, was she? Shakspeare.

His chamber being commonly stived with suitors, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servants to dress him, his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners. Wotton.

3. In the state of being risen from a seat.

Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that sir Roger was up. Addison.

4. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.

5. In a state of being built.

Up with my tent; here will I lie to-night; But where to-morrow?—well, all's one for that. Shakspeare.

6. Above the horizon.

As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city. Judges.

Now morn with rosy light had streak'd the sky, Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily; Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's lane. Dryden.

7. To a state of proficiency.

Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of christian indifference, we are in bondage. Atterbury.

8. In a state of exaltation.

Those that were up themselves kept others low; Those that were low themselves held others hard, Ne suffer'd them to rise, or greater grow. Spenser.

Henry the Fifth is crown'd; up, vanity! Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence! Shakspeare.

9. In a state of climbing.

Strait the rumour flew Up to the city; which heard, up they drew By daies first break. Chapman.

10. In a state of insurrection.

The gentle archbishop of York is up With well-appointed powers. Shakspeare.

Rebels there are up, And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shakspeare.

Thou hast fir'd me; my soul's up in arms, And mans each part about me. Dryden.

11. In a state of being increased, or raised.

Grief and passion are like floods raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be poured unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.

12. From a remoter place, coming to any person or place.

As a boar was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. L'Estrange.

13. Into order: as, he drew up his regiment.

14. From younger to elder years.

I am ready to die from my youth up. Psalms.

15. Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.

Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands when the tide is low. Addison.

16. Up and down. Backward and forward.

Our desire is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth. Hooker.

The skipping king he rambled up and down, With shallow jesters. Shakspeare.

Up and down he traverses his ground; Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again;

Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound; Now back he gives, then rushes on amain. Daniel.

Thou and death Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen

Wing silently the buxom air. Milton.

On this windy sea of land; the fiend Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey. Milton.

What a miserable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run starving up and down thus in woods. L'Estrange.

She moves! life wanders up and down Through all her face, and lights up every charm. Addison.

17. Up to. To an equal height with.

Tantalus was punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water, that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink it. Addison.

18. Up to. Adequately to.

The wisest men in all ages have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.

They are determined to live up to the holy rule by which they have obliged themselves to walk. Atterbury.

We must not only mortify all these passions that solicit us, but we must learn to do well, and act up to the positive precepts of our duty. Rogers.

19. Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.

She, quick and proud, and who did Pas despise, Up with her fist, and took him on the face;

Another time, quoth she, become more wise: Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidney.

20. It is added to verbs implying some accumulation, or increase.

If we could number up those prodigious swarms that settled in every part of the Campania of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any six parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison.

UP. interject.

1. A word exhorting to rise from bed.

Up, up! cries gluttony, 'tis break of day; Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey. Pope.

2. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.

U P B

Up then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of nine;
Such cause of mourning never hadst afore:
Up, grisly ghosts; and up, my rueful rime;
Matter of mirth now shalt thou have no more.

But up, and enter now into full blifs. Spenser.
Up, up, for honour's sake; twelve legions wait
you,

And long to call you chief. Dryden.

Up. prep. From a lower to a higher part;
not down.

In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary;
in going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.

To UPBEAR. v. a. pret. upbore; part. pass.
upborn. [up and bear.]

1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.
Upborn with indefatigable wings. Milton.

Rang'd in a line the ready racers stand,
Start from the goal, and vanish o'er the strand:
Swift as on wings of wind upborn they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope.

2. To raise aloft.
This with pray'r,
Or one short sight of human breath, upborn
Ev'n to the seat of God. Milton.

A monstrous wave upbore
The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore. Pope.

3. To support from falling.
Vital pow'rs 'gan wax both weak and wan,
For want of food and sleep; which two upbear,
Like weighty pillars, this frail life of man. Spenser.

To UPBRAID. v. a. [upgebrædan, up-gebrædan, Saxon.]

1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful. It has commonly with, sometimes of, before the thing imputed; sometimes it has only an accusative of the thing, as in Milton; and sometimes the person without the thing, or the thing without the person.

The fathers, when they were upbraided with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most gracious nature, who did not therefore the less accept of their hearty affection. Hooker.

But as an honour snatch'd with boist'rous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances,
Which daily grew to quarrel. Shakspeare.

If you refuse your aid, yet do not upbraid us with our distress. Shakspeare.

Vain man! how long wilt thou thy God upbraid?
And, like the roaring of a furious wind,
Thus vent the vile distemper of thy mind? Sandys.

How cunningly the forcerels displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine. Milt.

'Tis a general complaint against you, and I must upbraid you with it, that, because you need not write, you will not. Dryden.

You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by nature are unmade;
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear. Blackmore.

2. To object as matter of reproach: with to before the person.

Those that have been bred together, are more apt to envy their equals when raised: for it doth upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them. Bacon.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge or upbraid to them those small remains of antient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left. Sprat.

May they not justly to our climes upbraid,
Shortness of night, and penury of shade. Prior.

3. To urge with reproach.
I have too long born
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs. Shakspeare.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraidings of his own conscience. Decay of Piety.

U P H

4. To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.

Ev'ry hour

He flashes into one gross crime or other;
His knights grow riotous, and he himself up-braids us

On ev'ry trifle. Shakspeare.
If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth liberally, and upbraides not. James.

Be ashamed of upbraiding speeches before friends:
and after thou hast given, upbraid not. Ecclus.

5. To bring reproach upon; to show faults by being in a state of comparison.

Ah, my son, how evil fits it me to have such a son! and how much doth thy kindness upbraid
my wickedness! Sidney.

The counsel which I cannot take,
Instead of healing, but upbraids my weakness. Addison.

6. To treat with contempt. Not in use.

There also was that mighty monarch laid,
Low under all, yet above all in pride;
That name of native fire did foul upbraid,
And would, as Ammon's son, be magnify'd. Spenser.

UPBRAIDER. n. f. [from upbraid.] One that reproaches.

UPBRAIDINGLY. adv. By way of reproach.

The time was when men would learn and study good things, not envy those that had them. Then men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nick-name. Ben Jonson.

To UPBraid. v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To shame.

Vile knight,
That knights and knight-hood dost with shame
upbraid,
And shew'th th' ensample of thy childish might,
With filly, weak, old women thus to fight. Spenser.

UPBROUGHT. part. pass. of upbring.
Educated; nurtured.

Divinely wrought,
And of the brood of angels, heav'nly born,
And with the crew of blessed saints upbrought,
Each of which did her with her gifts adorn. Spens.

UPCAST. [Participle from To cast up.
The verb To upcast is not in use.] Thrown upward.

Beast with upcast eyes forsake their shade,
And gaze, as if I were to be obey'd. Dryden.

Old Saturn here, with upcast eyes,
Beheld his abdicated skies. Addison.

UPCAST. n. f. A term of bowling; a throw; a cast.

Was there ever man had such luck? when I kissed the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away! Shakspeare.

To UPGATHER. v. a. [up and gather.] To contract.

Himself he close upgather'd more and more
Into his den, that his deceitful train,
By his there being might not be bewraid,
Ne any noise, ne any question made. Spenser.

UPHAND. adj. [up and hand.] Lifted by the hand.

The uphand sledge is used by underworkmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter. They use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Moxon.

UPHELD. pret. and part. pass. of uphold.
Maintained; sustained.

He who reigns
Monarch in heav'n, till then, as one secure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.

UPHILL. adj. [up and hill.] Difficult;
like the labour of climbing a hill.

What an uphill labour must it be to a learner, who has those first rudiments to master at twenty years of age, which others are taught at ten. Clarissa.

U P H

Yet, as immortal, in our uphill chace
We press coy fortune with unslacken'd pace. Young.

To UPHOARD. v. a. [up and board.] To treasure; to store; to accumulate in private places.

Heaps of huge words upboarded hideously
With horrid sound, though having little sense,
They think to be chief praise of poetry;
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poesie,
And made a monster of their fantasie. Spenser.

If thou hast upboarded in thy life
Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,
Speak of it. Shakspeare.

To UPHOLD. v. a. preter. upheld; part.
pass. upheld, and upholden. [up and held.]

1. To lift on high.
The mournful train with groans, and hands upheld,
Besought his pity. Dryden.

2. To support; to sustain; to keep from falling.

While life upholds this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster. Shakspeare.

This great man found no means to continue and uphold his ill purchased greatness, but by rejecting the English law, and assuming, in lieu thereof, the barbarous customs of the Irish. Davies.

Poetry and painting were upheld by the strength of imagination. Dryden.

3. To keep from declension.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are fair pleaded; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel, and beats down in him the conceit of his cause. Bacon.

Never was a time, when the interposition of the magistrate was more necessary, to secure the honour of religion, and uphold the authority of those great principles, by which his own authority is best upheld. Atterbury.

4. To support in any state of life.

Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves. Raleigh.

5. To continue; to keep from defeat.

Divers, although peradventure not willing to be yoked with elderships, yet were contented to uphold opposition against bishops, not without greater hurt to the course of their whole proceedings. Hooker.

6. To keep from being lost.

In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. Shakspeare.

7. To continue without failing.

A deaf person, by observing the motions of another man's mouth, knows what he says, and upholds
a current communication of discourse with him. Holder.

8. To continue in being.

As Nebuchodnosor liveth, who hath sent thee for the upholding of every living thing. Judith.

A due proportion is held betwixt the parts, as well in the natural body of man, as the body politic of the state, for the upholding of the whole. Hakewill.

UPHOLDER. n. f. [from uphold.]

1. A supporter.

Suppose then Atlas ne'er so wise:
Yet when the weight of kingdoms lies
Too long upon his single shoulders,
Sink down he must, or find upholders. Swift.

2. A sustainer in being.

The knowledge thereof is so many manuductions to the knowledge and admiration of the infinite wisdom of the creator and upholder of them. Hale.

funerals.

The company of upholders have a right upon the bodies of the subjects. Arbutnot.

Where the brass knocker wrapt in flannel band
Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand;
Th' upholder, rueful harbinger of death,
Waits with impatience for the dying breath. Gay.

UPHOLSTERER. n. f. [a corruption of up-holder.] One who furnishes houses; one who fits up apartments with beds and furniture.

If a corner of the hanging wants a single nail, send for the upholsterer. Swift.

Mere wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,
Your barber, cook, upholsterer. Pope.

U'PLAND. n. s. [up and land.] Higher ground.

Men at first, after the flood, lived in the uplands and sides of the mountains, and by degrees sunk into the plains. Burnet.

U'PLAND. adj.

1. Higher in situation.

Those in Cornwall do no more by nature than others elsewhere by choice, conceive themselves an estranged society from the upland dwellers, and carry an emulation against them. Carew.

Sometimes with secure delight
The upland hamlets will invite. Milton.

2. Rude; savage. This is the meaning in Chapman; probably because the uplanders, having less commerce, were less civilized.

And long'd to see this heap of fortitude,
That so illiterate was, and upland rude,
That lawes divine nor humane he had learn'd. Chapman.

UPLA'NDISH. adj. [from upland.] Mountainous; inhabiting mountains.

Lion-like, uplandish, and mere wild,
Slave to his pride: and all his nerves being naturally compild

Of eminent strength; stalks out and preys upon a silly sheep. Chapman.

To UPLA'Y. v. a. [up and lay.] To heard; to lay up.

We are but farmers of ourselves; yet may,
If we can stock ourselves and thrive, uplay
Much, much good treasure for the great rent-day. Donne.

To UPLIFT. v. a. [up and lift.] To raise aloft.

Hard-hearted Clifford! take me from the world;
My soul to heav'n, my blood upon your heads. Shakspeare.

No man, who had a mind to do wrong, would be awed from doing it by a law that is always to be a sword in a scabbard, and must never be pleaded against him, or executed upon him. Kettleworth.

5. It expresses obstetation, or protestation.

How? that I should murder her?
Upon the love, and truth, and vows, which I Have made to thy command!—her!—her blood! Shakspeare.

6. It is used to express any hardship or mischief.

If we would neither impose upon ourselves, nor others, we must lay aside that fallacious method of censuring by the lump. Burnet.

That is not a fault inseparable from suits, but is the sin of the managers: it lies not naturally upon the thing, but only upon the contingent circumstances and manner of doing. Kettleworth.

7. In consequence of. Now little in use.

Let me not find you before me again upon any complaint whatsoever. Shakspeare.

Then the princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension of the ambitious designs of that nation. Bacon.

I wish it may not be concluded, left, upon second cogitations, there should be cause to alter. Bacon.

These forces took hold of divers; in some upon discontent, in some upon ambition, in some upon levity and desire of change, and in some few upon confidence and belief, but in most upon simplicity; and in divers out of dependance upon some of the better sort, who did in secret favour these broits. Bacon.

He made a great difference between people that did rebel upon wantonness, and them that did rebel upon want. Bacon.

Upon pity they were taken away, upon ignorance they are again demanded. Hayward.

Promises can be of no force, unless they be believed to be conditional, and unless that duty proposed to be enforced by them, be acknowledged to be part of that condition, upon performance of which those promises do, and upon the neglect of which those promises shall not belong to any. Hammond.

The king had no kindness for him upon an old account, as remembering the part he had acted against the earl of Strafford. Clarendon.

Though sin offers itself in never so pleasing and alluring a dress at first, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the soul, upon the commission of it, infinitely overbalance those faint and transient gratifications. South.

The common corruption of human nature, upon the bare stock of its original depravation, does not usually proceed so far. South.

When we make judgments upon general presumptions, they are made rather from the temper of our own spirit, than from reason. Burnet.

'Tis not the thing that is done, but the intention in doing it, that makes good or evil. There is a great difference betwixt what we do upon force, and what upon inclination. L'Estrange.

To live uprightly then is sure the best,
To save ourselves, and not to damn the rest. Dryden.

U'PRIGHTNESS. n. f. [from upright.]

1. Perpendicular erection. This was anciently accented on the second.

So the fair tree, which still preserves
Her fruit and state while no wind blows,
In storms from that uprightness swerves,
And the glad earth about her throws
With treasure from her yielding boughs. Waller.

2. Honesty; integrity.

The hypocrite bends his principles and practice to the fashion of a corrupt world; but the truly upright man is inflexible in his uprightness, and unalterable in his purpose. Atterbury.

To UPRI'SE. v. n. [up and rise.]

1. To rise from decumbiture.

Early, before the morn with crimson ray
The windows of bright heaven opened had,
Through which into the world the dawning day Might look, that maketh every creature glad, Uprose sir Guyon. Spenser.

Thou knowest my down-sitting, and mine uprising. Psalms.

Uprose the virgin with the morning light,
Obedient to the vision of the night. Pope.

2. To rise from below the horizon.

Uprose the sun. Cowley.

3. To rise with acclivity.

Was that the king that spurr'd his horse so hard Against the steep uprising of the hill? Shakespeare.

UPRI'SE. n. f. Appearance above the horizon.

Did ever raven sing so like a lark,
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise? Shakespeare.

UPROAR. n. f. [oproer, Dutch.] This word likewise is accented on the first syllable in prose; in verse, indifferently on either.] Tumult; bustle; disturbance; confusion.

The Jews, which believed not, set all the city on an uproar. Acts.

It were well if his holiness had not set the world in an uproar, by nourishing of war. Raleigh.

He levied forces in a disordered uproar, albeit the treason rested in him and some other his complices. Hayward.

The uproar was so loud, that the accusation itself could not be heard. Holiday.

Others, with vast Typhæan rage more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwind: hell scarce holds the wild uproar. Milton.

Horror thus prevail'd,
And wild uproar! ah, who at length will end
This long pernicious fray? Philips.

The impiety of this sentiment set the audience in an uproar; and made Socrates, though an intimate friend of the poet, go out of the theatre with indignation. Addison.

To UPRO'AR. v. a. [from the noun.] To throw into confusion. Not in use.

Had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth. Shakespeare.

To UPROO'T. v. a. [up and root.] To tear up by the root.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,
And trees uprooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre;
But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher;
When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard,
And straight appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heav'n. Dryden.

To UPRO'USE. v. a. [up and rouse.] To waken from sleep; to excite to action.

Thou art uprous'd by some distemperature. Shakespeare.

U'PSHOT. n. f. [up and shot.] Conclusion; end; last amount; final event.

With this he kindled his ambitious spight
To like desire and praise of noble fame,
The only upshot whereto he doth aim. Hubb. Tale.

I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Shakespeare.

In this upshot, purposes mistook
Fall on th' inventors heads. Shakespeare.

Every leading demonstration to the main upshot of all, which is the proportion betwixt the sphere and cylinder, is a pledge of the wit and reason of that mathematician. Mure.

Upon the upshot, afflictions are but the methods of a merciful providence, to force us upon the only means of setting matters right. L'Estrange.

Here is an end of the matter, says the prophet: here is the upshot and result of all; here terminate both the prophecies of Daniel and St. John. Barnet.

Let's now make an end of matters peaceably, as we shall quickly come to the upshot of our affair. Arbutnot.

At the upshot, after a life of perpetual application, to reflect that you have been doing nothing for yourself, and that the same or less industry might have gained you a friendship that can never deceive or end; a glory, which, though not to be had till after death, yet shall be felt and enjoyed to eternity. Pope.

U P T

U'PSIDE down. [an adverbial form of speech.]

1. With the lower part above the higher.

In the day-time they fish in their boats, which they draw unto the land at night; and, turning them upside down, sleep under them. Heylin.

2. In confusion; in complete disorder.

In his lap a mass of coin he told,
And turned upside down, to feed his eye
And covetous desire with his huge treasure. Spenser.

The flood did not so turn upside down the face of the earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreased. Raleigh.

The severe notions of christianity turned all this upside down, filling all with surprize and amazement. They came upon the world like light darting full upon the face of a man asleep, who had a mind not to be disturbed. South.

U'PSPRING. n. s. [up and spring.] This word seems to signify upstart; a man suddenly exalted. Not used.

The king doth wake to-night, and takes his rouse;
Keeps wassel, and the swagg'ring upspring reels. Shakspeare.

To UPSTAND. v. n. [up and stand.] To be erected.

Sea-calves unwonted to fresh rivers fly;
The water snakes with scales upstanding die. May.

To UPSTART. v. n. [up and start.] To spring up suddenly.

He upstarted brave
Out of the well, wherein he drenched lay,
As eagle fresh out of the ocean wave. Spenser.

Thus having spoke, he sat; thus answer'd then,
Upstarting from his throne, the king of men,
His breast with fury fill'd. Dryden.

UPSTART. n. s. [up and start.] One suddenly raised to wealth, power, or honour; what suddenly rises and appears.

Two hundred in a place will be enough for the safeguard of that country, and keeping under all sudden upstarts, that shall seek to trouble the peace thereof. Spenser.

My rights and royalties
Pluckt from my arms perforce, and given away
To upstart unthrifts. Shakspeare.

Mushrooms have two strange properties; the one, that they yield so delicious a meat; the other, that they come up so hastily, even in a night, and yet they are unfown; and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms. Bacon.

The king did not neglect Ireland, the soil where these mushrooms and upstart weeds, that spring up in a night, did chiefly prosper. Bacon.

A place of bliss
In the purlieus of heav'n, and therein plac'd
A race of upstart creatures, to supply
Perhaps our vacant room. Milton.

Inordinate desires,
And upstart passions, catch the government
From reason. Milton.

Mean upstarts, when they come once to be preferred, forget their fathers. L'Estrange.

Trad-, he said, carried from us the commodities of our country, and made a parcel of upstarts as rich as men of the most antient families. Addison.

To UPSTAY. v. a. [up and stay.] To sustain; to support.

Them she upstays
Gently with myrtle band: mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupported flow'r. Milton.

To UPSWARM. v. a. [up and swarm.] To raise in a swarm. Out of use.

You've taken up the subjects of my father,
And both against the voice of heav'n and him
Have here upswarm'd them. Shakspeare.

To UPTAKE. v. a. [up and take.] To take into the hands.

He hearken'd to his reason, and the child
Uptaking, to the palmer gave to bear. Spenser.

To UPTRAIN. v. a. [up and train.] To bring up; to educate. Not used.

VOL. II.

U R C

King Lear in happy peace long reign'd,
But had no issue male him to succeed
But three fair daughters, which were well up- train'd

In all that seemed fit for kingly seed. Spenser.
To UPTURN. v. a. [up and turn.] To throw up; to furrow.

So scented the grim feature, and upturn'd
His nostrils wide into the murky air. Milton.
Beyond all marks, with many a giddy round
Down rushing, it upturns a hill of ground. Pope.

U'PWARD. adj. [up, and peap'd, Saxon.] Directed to a higher part.

Spread upon a lake, with upward eye,
A plump of fowl behold their foe on high. Dryden.
The angel said;

With upward speed his agile wings he spread. Prior.

U'PWARD. n. s. The top. Out of use.

From the extremest upward of thy head
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most toad-spotted traitor. Shakspeare.

U'PWARD. } adv. [up and peap'd.]
U'PWARDS. }

1. Toward a higher place: opposed to downward.

I thought
To smoothe your passage, and to soften death:
For I would have you, when you upward move,
Speak kindly of me to our friends above. Dryden.

In sheets of rain the sky descends,
And ocean swell'd with waters upwards tends;
One rising, falling one, the heav'ns and sea
Meet at their confines, in the middle way. Dryden.

A man on a cliff is at liberty to leap twenty yards downwards into the sea, not because he has power to do the contrary action, which is to leap twenty yards upwards, for that he cannot do; but he is therefore free, because he has a power to leap, or not to leap. Locke.

2. Toward heaven and God.

Looking inward, we are stricken dumb; looking upward, we speak and prevail. Hooker.

3. With respect to the higher part.

Dagon, sea-monster! upward man,
And downward fish. Milton.

4. More than; with tendency to a higher or greater number.

Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men now to suspect that, wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance and upwards, enough to take away suspicion. Hooker.

I have been your wife in this obedience
Upward of twenty years; and have been blest
With many children by you. Shakspeare.

5. Toward the source.

Be Homer's works your study;
Thence form your judgment, thence your notions bring,
And trace the muses upward to their spring. Pope.

To UPWIND. v. a. pret. and pass. up- wound. [up and wind.] To convolve.

As she lay upon the dirty ground,
Her huge long tail her den all overspread,
Yet was in knots and many boughs upwound. Spenser.

URBANITY. n. s. [urbanité, Fr. urbanitas, Lat.] Civility; elegance; politeness; merriment; facetiousness.

A rustical severity banishes all urbanity, whose harmless condition is consistent with religion. Brown.

Raillery is the sauce of civil entertainment; and without some such tincture of urbanity, good humour falters. L'Estrange.

Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-mannered wit, constitute the Roman satire. Dryden.

URCHIN. n. s. [heureuchin, Armorick; erinaceus, Latin.]

1. A hedge-hog.

Urchins shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee. Shakspeare.

A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,

U R G

Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, hearing it,
Would straight fall mad. Shakspeare.

That nature designs the preservation of the more infirm creatures by the defensive armour it hath given them, is demonstrable in the common hedgehog, or urchin. Ray.

2. A name of slight anger to a child.

Pleas'd Cupid heard, and check'd his mother's pride:

And who's blind now, mamma? the urchin cried.
'Tis Chloe's eye, and cheek, and lip, and breast:
Friend Howard's genius fancied all the rest. Prior.

URE. n. s. Practice; use; habit. Obsolete.

Is the warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as are and have been put in ure for the establishment of that cause? Hooker.

He would keep his hand in ure with somewhat of greater value, till he was brought to justice. L'Estrange.

URETER. n. s. [urètre; uréter, Fr.]

Ureters are two long and small canals from the basin of the kidneys, one on each side. Their use is to carry the urine from the kidneys to the bladder. Quincy.

The kidneys and ureters serve for expurgation. Wiseman.

URETHRA. n. s. [urètra; uretre, Fr.]

The passage of the urine.

Caruncles are loose flesh arising in the urethra. Wiseman.

1. To incite; to push; to press by motives.

You do mistake your business: my brother
Did urge me in his act. Shakspeare.

What I have done my safety urg'd me to. Shakspeare.

This urges me to fight, and fires my mind. Dryden.

High Epidaurus urges on my speed,
Fam'd for his hills, and for his horse's breed. Dryden.

The heathens had but uncertain apprehensions of what urges men most powerfully to forsake their sins. Tillotson.

2. To provoke; to exasperate.

Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
But think upon my grief. Shakspeare.

3. To follow close, so as to impel.

Man? and for ever? wretch! what wouldst thou have?

Heir urges heir, like wave impelling wave. Pope.

4. To labour vehemently; to do with eagerness or violence.

He, seiz'd with horror, in the shades of night
Through the thick darkness headlong urg'd his flight. Pope.

5. To press; to enforce.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers;
Your haite is now urg'd on you. Shakspeare.

Urge your petitions in the street. Shakspeare.

And great Achilles urges the Trojan fate. Dryden.

6. To press as an argument.

He pleaded still not guilty;

The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions,
Of divers witnesses. Shakspeare.

Urge the necessity and state of times,
And be not peevish. Shakspeare.

But against all this some may urge two places, which seem to take away all suits among christians. Kettlerwell.

7. To importune; to solicit.

He urg'd sore,
With piercing words and pitiful implore,
Him hasty to arise. Spenser.

8. To press in opposition, by way of objection.

Though every man have a right in dispute to urge a false religion, with all its absurd consequences;
yet it is barbarous incivility scurrilously to sport with that which others account religion. Tillotson.

To URGE. v. n. To press forward.

U R I

A palace, when 'tis that which it should be,
Stands such, or else decays:

But he which dwells there is not so; for he Strives to urge upward, and his fortune raise.

Donne.

U'RGENCY. n. f. [from urgent.] Pressure of difficulty or necessity.

Being for some hours extremely pressed by the necessities of nature, I was under great difficulties between urgency and shame.

Gulliver.

U'RGENT. adj. [urgent, Fr. urgens, Lat.]

1. Cogent; pressing; violent.

Things so ordained are to be kept; howbeit not necessarily any longer than till there grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary.

Hooker.

Not alone

The death of Fulvia, but more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak t' us.

Shakspeare.

This ever hath been that true cause of more wars than upon all other occasions, though it least partakes of the urgent necessity of state.

Raleigh.

Let a father seldom strike, but upon very urgent necessity, and as the last remedy.

Locke.

2. Importunate; vehement in solicitation.

ses; importuner.

I wish Pope were as great an urger as I.

Swift.

U'RGEWONDER. n. f. A sort of grain.

This barley is called by some urgewonder.

Mortimer.

U'RIM. n. f.

Urim and thummim were something in Aaron's breast-plate; but what, critics and commentators are by no means agreed. The word urim signifies light, and thummim perfection. It is most probable that they were only names given to signify the clearness and certainty of the divine answers which were obtained by the high priest consulting God with his breast-plate on, in contradistinction to the obscure, enigmatical, uncertain, and imperfect answers of the heathen oracles.

Newton.

He in celestial panoply all arm'd,
Of radiant urim, work divinely wrought.

Milton.

U'RINAL. n. f. [urinal, Fr. from urine.]

A bottle, in which water is kept for inspection.

These follies shine through you, like the water in an urinal.

Shakspeare.

A candle out of a musket will pierce through an inch board, or an urinal force a nail through a plank.

Brown.

This hand, when glory calls,
Can brandish arms as well as urinals.

Garth.

Some with scymitars in their hands, and others with urinals, ran to and fro.

Speclator.

U'RINARY. adj. [from urine.] Relating to the urine.

The urachus or ligamentous passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it dis-chargeth the waterish and urinary part of its contents.

Brown.

Diureticks that relax the urinary passages, should be tried before such as stimulate.

Arbutnot.

U'RINATIVE. adj. Working by urine;
provoking urine.

Medicines urivative do not work by rejection and indigestion, as solutive do.

Bacon.

URINA'TOR. n. f. [urinateur, Fr. urinator, Lat.] A diver; one who searches under water.

The precious things that grow there, as pearl, may be much more easily fetched up by the help of this, than by any other way of the urinators.

Wilkins.

Those relations of urinators belong only to those places where they have dived, which are always rocky.

Ray.

U S A

U'RINE. n. f. [urine, Fr. urina, Lat.]

Animal water.

Drink, sir, is a great provoker of nose-painting, sleep, and urine.

Shakspeare.

As though there were a feminality in urine, or that, like the seed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they foolishly believe we can visibly behold therein the anatomy of every particle.

Brown.

The chyle cannot pass by urine nor sweat.

Arbutnot.

To U'RINE. v. n. [uriner, Fr. from the noun.] To make water.

Places where men urine commonly have some smell of violets.

Bacon.

No oviparous animal, which spaw or lay eggs,
doth urine, except the tortoise.

Brown.

U'RINOUS. adj. [from urine.] Partaking of urine.

The putrid matter being distilled, affords a water impregnated with an urinous spirit, like that obtainable from animal substances.

Arbutnot.

URN. n. f. [urne, Fr. urna, Latin.]

1. Any vessel, of which the mouth is narrower than the body.

Vesta is not displeas'd, if her chaste urn
Do with repaired fuel burn;
But my faint frowns, though to her honour'd name
I consecrate a never-dying flame.

Carew.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rowls;
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.

Dryden.

2. A water-pot; particularly that in the sign of Aquarius.

The fish oppose the maid, the watry urn
With adverse fires sees raging Leo burn.

Creech.

3. The vessel in which the remains of burnt bodies were put.

O lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them.

Shakspeare.

A rustick digging in the ground by Padua, found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn; and, in this lesser, a lamp clearly burning.

Wilkins.

His scatter'd limbs with my dead body burn;
And once more join us in the pious urn.

Dryden.

URO'SCOPY. n. f. [ὑρον and σκοπέω.] Inspection of urine.

In this work, attempts will exceed performances;
it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacations, and uroscopy, would permit.

Brown.

U'RRY. n. f. A mineral.

In the coal-mines they dig a blue or black clay, that lies near the coal, commonly called urry, which is an unripe coal, and is very proper for hot lands, especially pasture-ground.

Mortimer.

Us. The oblique case of we.

The lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day.

Deuteronomy.

U'SAGE. n. f. [usage, French.]

1. Treatment.

Which way

Might'st thou deserve, or they impose, this usage.

Shakspeare.

The lustre in your eye, heav'n in your cheek,
Plead you fair usage.

Shakspeare.

My brother

Is pris'ner to the bishop, at whose hands
He hath good usage, and great liberty.

Shakspeare.

The rest were sav'd, and made enthralled swains
To all the basest usages there bred.

Chapman.

What usage have I met with from this adversary, who passes by the very words I translated, and produces other passages; and then hectors and cries out of my dissingenuity?

Stillingfleet.

Are not hawks brought to the hand and to the lure, and lions reclaimed, by good usage?

L'Estrange.

He was alarmed with the expectation of that usage, which was then a certain consequent of such mentorious acts.

What art thou,

That here in desert hast thine habitation,
And these rich heaps of wealth dost hide apart
From the world's eye, and from her right usance?

Spenser.

2. Usury; interest paid for money.

He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance.

Shakspeare.

USE. n. f. [usus, Latin.]

1. The act of employing any thing to any purpose.

The fat of the beast that dieth of itself, may be used in any other use.

Leviticus.

Number the mind makes use of in measuring all things by us measurable.

Locke.

Consider the history, with what use our author makes of it.

Locke.

Things may, and must, differ in their use; but yet they are all to be used according to the will of God.

great distances. Arbutnot.

VULGAR. adj. [vulgaire, French; vulgaris, Latin.]

1. Plebeian; suiting to the common people; practised among the common people.

Men who have passed all their time in low and vulgar life, cannot have a suitable idea of the several beauties and blemishes in the actions of great men. Addison.

2. Vernacular; national.

It might be more useful to the English reader, who was to be his immediate care, to write in our vulgar language. Fell.

V U L

3. Mean; low; being of the common rate.

It requiring too great a sagacity for vulgar minds, to draw the line between virtue and vice, no wonder if most men attempt not a laborious scrutiny into things themselves, but only take names and words, and forest in them. South.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes have bowed me to the ground:
Yet by the stubble you may guess the grain,
And mark the ruins of no vulgar man. Broome.

4. Publick; commonly bruited.

Do you hear aught of a battle toward? — —Most sure, and vulgar; every one hears that. Shakspeare.

W Is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the sound of the Roman v, and the Eolick f. Both the form and sound are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin. W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel for u; view, strew: the sound of w consonant, if it be a consonant, is uniform.

To WA'BBLE. v. n. [a low barbarous word.] To move from side to side; to change direction.

If in your work you find it wabble; that is, that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then screw it hard up.
Moxon.

WAD. n. f. [peod, hay, Sax.]

1. A bundle of straw or other loose matter thrust close together.
2. Wadd, or black lead, is a mineral of great use and value.
Woodward.

WA'DDING. n. f. [from wad, vad, Islandick.] A kind of soft stuff loosely woven, with which the skirts of coats are stuffed out.

To WA'DDLE. v. n. [wagghelen, Dutch, to waggle; whence, by a casual corruption, waddle.] To shake, in walking, from side to side; to deviate in motion from a right line.

She could have run and waddled all about.

The strutting petticoat smooths and levels all distinctions; while I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped, innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down, like big-bellied women.
Spektator.

The farmer's goose,
Grown fat with corn and sitting still,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door fill,
And hardly waddles forth to cool
Her belly in th' neighb'ring pool.
Swift.

Dulness, of business the directing soul,
To human heads like bias to the bowl;
Which, as more pond'rous, makes their aim more true,
Obliquely waddling to the mark in view.
Pope.

W A D

She drawls her words, and waddles in her pace;
Unwast her hands, and much besnufft her face.
Young.

Returning were as tedious as go o'er.
Shakspere.

He staid seven days at the Crassus, until a bridge was made for the transporting of his army, for that the river was not to be waded over.
Knolles.

Then, since fortune's favours fade,
You that in her arms do sleep,
Learn to swim, and not to wade,
For the hearts of kings are deep.
Wotton.

With head, hands, wings, or feet pursues his way,
And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies.
Milton.

It is hard to wade deep in baths where springs arise.
Brown.

Fowls that frequent waters, and only wade, have as well long legs as long necks; and those that are made for swimming have feet like oars.
More.

2. To pass difficultly and laboriously.

They were not permitted to enter into war, nor conclude any league of peace, nor to wade through any act of moment between them and foreign states, unless the oracle of God, or his prophets, were first consulted with.
Hooker.

I have waded through the whole cause, searching the truth by the causes of truth.
Hooker.

Virtue gives herself light, through darkness for to wade.
Spenser.

Occasions you have met with to excite your faculties to wade a little farther into the positive part of these doctrines.
Hammond.

I should chuse rather with spitting and scorn to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord; than, by a denial of those truths, through blood and perjury wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne.
South.

'Tis not to my purpose to wade into those bottomless controversies, which, like a gulph, have swallowed up so much time of learned men.

By thee communicated, and our want. Milton.

Parents should distinguish between the wants of fancy, and those of nature. Locke.

Here learn the great unreal wants to feign,
Unpleasing truths here mortify the vain. Savage.

Ev'n to brute beasts his righteous care extends,
He feels their fust'nings, and their wants befriends.
Harte.

2. Deficiency.

This proceeded not from any want of knowledge,
but of judgment. Dryden.

One objection to Civita Vecchia is, that the air is not wholesome: this proceeds from want of inhabitants. Addison.

The blood flows through the vessels, by the excess of the force of the heart above the incumbent pressure, which in fat people is excessive; and as want of a due quantity of motion of the fluids increaseth fat, the disease is the cause of itself. Arbutnot.

Wants of all kinds are made to frame a plea,
One learns to lisp, another not to see. Young.

3. The state of not having.

You shall have no reason to complain of me, for want of a generous disdain of this world. Pope.

4. Poverty; penury; indigence.

Nothing is so hard for those who abound in riches,
as to conceive how others can be in want. Swift.

5. [panb, Saxon.] A mole.

A kind of hare resembling a want in his feet,
and a cat in his tail. Heylin.

WA'NTON. adj. [This word is derived by Minsheu from want one, a man or woman that wants a companion. This etymology, however odd, Junius silently adopts. Skinner, who had more acuteness, cannot forbear to doubt it, but offers nothing better.]

1. Lascivious; libidinous; lecherous; lust- ful.

Thou art froward by nature, enemy to peace,
Lascivious, wanton; more than well beseems
A man of thy profession. Shakspeare.

Entic'd to do him wanton rites. Milton.

2. Licentious; dissolute.

My plenteous joys,
Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow. Shakspeare.

Men grown wanton by prosperity
Study'd new arts of luxury and ease. Roscommon.

3. Frolicsome; gay; sportive; airy.

As flies to wanton boys, we are to th' gods:
They kill us for their sport. Shakspeare.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds. Shakspeare.

W A N

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it fed ye! and how sleek and wanton
Y' appear, in every thing may bring my ruin.

Shakspeare.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold;

The flow'rs do fade, and wanton fields

To wayward winter reckoning yields.

Raleigh.

4. Loose; unrestrained.

How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise!

Addison.

5. Quick and irregular of motion.

She as a veil down to the slender waist

Her unadorned golden tresses wore,

Dishevell'd, but in wanton ringlets wav'd,

As the vine curls her tendrils.

Milton.

6. Luxuriant; superfluous.

What we by day lop overgrown,

One night or two with wanton growth derides,

Tending to wild.

Milton.

Women richly gay in gems and wanton drefs.

Milton.

7. Not regular; turned fortuitously.

The quaint mazes in the wanton green,

For want of tread, are undistinguishable.

Milton.

WANTON. n. f.

1. A lascivious person; a strumpet; a whoremonger.

To lip a wanton in a secure couch,

And to suppose her chaste.

Shakspeare.

An old wanton will be doating upon women,
when he can scarce see without spectacles.

South.

2. A trifler; an insignificant flutterer.

Shall a beardless boy,

A cocker'd, filken wanton, brave your fields,

Mocking the air with colours idly spread,

And find no check?

Shakspeare.

Pass with your best violence;

I am afraid you make a wanton of me.

Shakspeare.

3. A word of slight endearment.

Peace, my wantons; he will do

More than you can aim unto.

Ben Jonson.

To WANTON. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play lasciviously.

He from his guards and midnight tent

Disguis'd o'er hills and vallies went

To wanton with the sprightly dame,

And in his pleasure lost his fame.

Prior.

2. To revel; to play. In Otway it may be an adjective.

Oh! I heard him wanton in his praise;

Speak things of him might charm the ears.

Nature here

Wanton'd as in her prime, and play'd at will

Her virgin fancies.

Milton.

O ye muses! deign your blest retreat,

Where Horace wantons at your spring,

And Pindar sweeps a bolder string.

Fenton.

3. To move nimbly and irregularly.

WANTONLY. adv. [from wanton.]

Lasciviously; frolicsomely; gayly; sportively; carelessly.

Into what sundry gyres her wondered self she throws,

And oft inisles the shore, as wantonly she flows.

Drayton.

Thou dost but try how far I can forbear,

Nor art that monster which thou wouldst appear:

But do not wantonly my passion move,

I pardon nothing that relates to love.

Dryden.

WANTONNESS. n. f. [from wanton.]

1. Lasciviousness; lechery.

The spirit of wantonness is scar'd out of him.

Shakspeare.

Bulls and goats bled apace; but neither the violence of the one, nor the wantonness of the other, ever died a victim at any of their altars.

South.

2. Sportiveness; frolick; humour.

As sad as night,

Only for wantonness.

Shakspeare.

Love, rais'd on beauty, will like that decay;

Our hearts may bear its slender chain a day:

As flow'ry bands in wantonness are worn,

A morning's pleasure, and at evening torn.

Pope.

3. Licentiousness; negligence of restraint.

The tumults threatened to abuse all acts of grace, and turn them into wantonness.

King Charles.

W A R

Wantonness and pride

Raise out of friendship hostile deeds in peace.

Milton.

WA'NTWIT. n. f. [want and wit.]

A fool; an idiot.

Such a wantwit sadness makes of me,

That I have much ado to know myself.

WA'NTY. n. f. [I know not whence derived.]

A broad girth of leather, by which the load is bound upon the horse; a surcingle.

A panel and wanty, pack-saddle and ped,

With line to fetch litter.

Tusser.

WA'PED. adj. [Of this word I know not the original, except that to whape, to shock, or deject, is found in Spenser; from which the meaning may be gathered.]

Dejected; crushed by misery.

This makes the waped widow wed again.

WA'PENTAKE. n. f. [from wæpun, Saxon, and take; wapentakium, wapentagium, low Latin.]

Wapentake is all one with what we call a hundred: as, upon a meeting for that purpose, they touched each other's weapons, in token of their fidelity and allegiance.

Cowell.

Hundred signifieth a hundred pledges, which were under the command and assurance of their alderman; which, as I suppose, was also called a wapentake; so named, of touching the weapon or spear of their alderman, and swearing to follow him faithfully, and serve their prince truly. But others think that a wapentake was ten hundreds, or boroughs.

Spenser.

WAR. n. f. [werre, old Dut. guerre, Fr.]

1. War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and resistance, being the essential parts thereof. Violence, limited by authority, is sufficiently distinguished from robbery, and the like outrages; yet, consisting in relation towards others, it necessarily requires a supposition of resistance, whereby the force of war becomes different from the violence inflicted upon slaves or yielding malefactors.

Raleigh.

On, you noblest English,

Whose blood is fetcht from fathers of war proof.

Shakspeare.

After a denunciation or indiction of war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but left at large.

Bacon.

I saw the figure and armour of him that headed the peasants in the war upon Bern, with the several weapons found on his followers.

Addison.

2. The instruments of war, in poetical language.

The god of love inhabits there,

With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care;

His complement of stores, and total war.

Prior.

3. Forces; army. Poetically.

On th' embattled ranks the waves return,

And overwhelm the war.

Milton.

4. The profession of arms.

Thine almighty word leapt down from heaven, as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction.

Wisdom.

5. Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.

Duncan's horses

Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,

Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with man.

Shakspeare.

To WAR. v. n. [from the noun.]

To make war; to be in a state of hostility.

Was this a face

To be expos'd against the warring winds?

Why should I war without the walls of Troy,

That find such cruel battle here within?

Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.—

W A R

—Have you that holy feeling in your soul,
To counsel me to make my peace with God;
And are you yet to your own souls so blind,
That you will war with God by murd'ring me?

Shakspeare.

He teacheth my hands to war.

2 Samuel.

This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare.

1 Timothy.

He limited his forces, to proceed in aid of the Britons, but in no wise to war upon the French.

Bacon.

We seem ambitious God's whole work t' undo;
With new diseases on ourselves we war,
And with new phytick, a worse engine far.

Donne.

His next design

Was all the Theban race in arms to join,

And war on Theseus.

Dryden.

To the island of Delos, by being reckon'd a sacred place, nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded as in a neutral country.

Arbutnot.

To WAR. v. a. To make war upon. Not used. In Spenser it is probably falsely printed for warraid.

And them long time before great Nimrod was,

That first the world with sword and fire warred.

Spenser.

To them the same was render'd, to the end,

To war the Scot, and borders to defend.

David.

To WA'RBLE. v. a. [werben, old Teutonic; wervelen, German, to twirl, or turn round.]

1. To quaver any sound.

Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow

Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise.

Milton.

2. To cause to quaver.

Follow me as I sing,

And touch the warbled string.

Milton.

3. To utter musically.

She can thaw the numbing spell,

If she be right invok'd with warbled song.

Milton.

To WA'RBLE. v. n.

1. To be quavered.

Such strains ne'er warble in the linnet's throat.

Gay.

2. To be uttered melodiously.

A plaining song plain singing voice requires,

For warbling notes from inward cheering flow.

Sidney.

There birds resort, and in their kind thy praise
Among the branches chant in warbling lays.

Wotton.

3. To sing.

Creatures that liv'd, and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew;

Birds on the branches warbling; all things smil'd.

Milton.

She warbled in her throat,

And tun'd her voice to many a merry note,

But indistinct.

Dryden.

A bard amid the joyous circle sings
High airs attemper'd to the vocal strings;

Whilst warbling to the varied strain advance

Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance.

Pope.

WA'RBLER. n. f. [from warble.]

A singer; a songster.

Hark! on ev'ry bough,

In lulling strains, the feather'd warblers woo.

Tickell.

WARD. A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as heavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way; from peapb, Saxon: it notes tendency to or from.

Before she could come to the arbour, the saw walking from her-ward a man in shepherdish apparel.

Sidney.

To WARD. v. a. [peapbrian, Saxon; warden, Dutch; garder, French.]

1. To guard; to watch.

W A R

He marched forth towards the castle wall,
Whose gates he found fast shut; ne living wight
To ward the fame, nor answer comers call.
Spenser.

2. To defend; to protect.

Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shaksp.

3. To fence off; to obstruct or turn aside any thing mischievous. It is now used with off, less elegantly.

Not once the baron lift his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where lordly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
No way to ward or shun her blows he tries.
Fairfax.

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again.
Daniel.

Toxus amaz'd, and with amazement flow,
Or to revenge or ward the coming blow
Stood doubting; and, while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood.
Dryden.

The pointed javelin warded off his rage. Addison.
The provision of bread for food, cloathing to ward off the inclemency of the air, were to be first looked after. Woodward.

It instructs the scholar in the various methods of warding off the force of objections, and of discovering and repelling the subtle tricks of sophisters.
Watts.

To WARD. v. n.

1. To be vigilant; to keep guard.

2. To act upon the defensive with a weapon.

So redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back. Sidney.
Short crooked swords in closer fight they wear,
And on their warding arms light bucklers bear.
Dryden.

WARD. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Watch; act of guarding.

Still when she slept he kept both watch and ward.
Spenser.

Sublime on these a tow'r of steel is rear'd,
And dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward;
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way.
Dryden.

2. Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.

By reason of these two forts, though there be but small wards left in them, there are two good towns now grown, which are the greatest stay of both those two countries. Spenser.

Th' assieged castles ward
Their stedfast stonds did mightily maintain. Spenser.

3. Guard made by a weapon in fencing.

Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Shakspere.

Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick. Shaksp.

Now by proof it shall appear,
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.
At this I threw: for want of other ward,
He lifted up his hand his front to guard. Dryden.

4. Fortrefs; strong hold.

She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour. Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakspere.

5. [warda, law Lat.] District of a town.

Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward. Dryden.

6. Custody; confinement.

That wretched creature, being apprehended in that impiety, was held in ward. Hooker.
Stopt there was his too veh'ment speech with speed,
And he sent close to ward from whence he stood.
Daniel.

7. The part of a lock, which, correspond- ing to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.

W A R

In the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and ev'ry bolt and bar.
Milton.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in the making and contriving their wards, or guards. Moxon.

The keys, as well as the locks, were fitted ward to ward by the same wisdom. Grew.

8. One in the hands of a guardian.

The king causeth bring up his wards, but bestoweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful. Drummond.

You know our father's ward,
The fair Monimia: is your heart at peace?
Is it so guarded that you could not love her? Otway.

Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed before she was my ward. Dryden.

When, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

Titles of honour, and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God. Sprat.

9. The state of a child under a guardian.

I must attend his majesty's command, to whom
I am now in ward, evermore in subjection. Shaksp.

Lewis the eleventh of France having much abated the greatness and power of the peers, would say, that he had brought the crown out of ward.
Bacon.

10. Guardianship; right over orphans.

It is also inconvenient, in Ireland, that the wards and marriages of gentlemen's children should be in the disposal of any of those lords. Spenser.

WA'RDEN. n. f. [waerden, Dutch.]

1. A keeper; a guardian.

2. A head officer.

The warden of apothecaries hall. Garth.

3. Warden of the cinque ports.

A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of those havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why one magistrate should be assigned to these havens seems to be, because, in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies. Cowell.

4. [pyrum voleum, Latin. I know not whence denominated.] A large pear.

Nor must all shoots of pears alike be set,
Crustumian, Syrian pears, and wardens great.
May.

Ox-cheek when hot, and wardens bak'd, some cry. King.

WA'RDEN. n. f. [from ward.]

1. A keeper; a guard.

Upon those gates with force he fiercely flew,
And rending them in pieces, felly flew
Those wardens strange, and all that else he met.
Spenser.

Where be these wardens, that they wait not here?
Open the gates. Shakspere.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown
down,
Though castles topple on their wardens heads.
Shakspere.

The wardens of the gate but scarce maintain
Th' unequal combat, and resist in vain. Dryden.

2. A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.

Then, then, when there was nothing could have staid
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warden down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw. Shaksp.

WA'RDNOTE. n. f. [peano and mot, or gemot, Sax. wardemotus, low Lat.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London, for the direction of their affairs.

WA'RDROBE. n. f. [garderobe, Fr. garde- roba, low Lat.] A room where clothes are kept.

W A R

The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But cloaths meet to keep keen cold away. Spenser.

I will kill all his coats,
I'll murder all his wardrobe piece by piece,
Until I meet the king. Shakspere.

Behold,
What from his wardrobe her belov'd allows,
To deck the wedding-day of his unspotted spouse.
Dryden.

It would not be an impertinent design to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see togas and tunicas, the chalmys and tra-bea, and all the different vests and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors.
Addison.

WA'RDSHIP. n. f. [from ward.]

1. Guardianship.

By reason of the tenures in chief revived, the sums for respect of homage be encreased, and the profits of wardships cannot but be much advanced. Bacon.

2. Pupillage; state of being under ward.

The houses sued out their livery, and redeemed themselves from the wardships of tumults.
King Charles.

WARE. The preterit of wear, more fre- quently wore.

A certain man ware no cloaths. Luke.

WARE. adj. [for this we commonly say aware.]

1. Being in expectation of; being provided against.

The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him. Matthew.

2. Cautious; wary.

What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,
As to descry the crafty cunning train
By which deceit doth mask in vizor fair. Spenser.
Bid her well be ware and still erect. Milton.

To WARE. v. n. To take heed of; to beware.

A shuffled, fullen, and uncertain light
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again,
Then ware a rising tempest on the main. Dryden.

WARE. n. f. [papp, Sax. waere, Dutch; wara, Swedish.] Commonly something to be sold.

Let us, like merchants, shew our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell. Shakspere.
If the people bring ware or any victuals to sell,
that we would not buy it. Nehemiah.

I know thou whole art but a shop
Of toys and trifles, traps and snares,
To take the weak, and make them stop;
Yet art thou falser than thy wares. Ben Jonson.

Why should my black thy love impair?
Let the dark shop commend the ware. Cleaveland.

London, that vents of false ware so much store,
In no ware deceives us more. Cowley.

He turns himself to other wares which he finds your markets take off. Locke.

WA'REFUL. adj. [ware and full.] Cau- tious; timorously prudent.

WA'REFULNESS. n. f. [from wareful.]

Cautiousness. Obsolete.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full; but full of warefulness. Sidney.

WA'REHOUSE. n. f. [ware and house.] A storehouse of merchandise.

His understanding is only the warehouse of other men's lumber, I mean false and unconcluding reasonings, rather than a repository of truth for his own use. Locke.

She had never more ships at sea, greater quantities of merchandise in her warehouses, than at present.
Addison.

She the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong crane. Thomson.

WA'RELESS. adj. [from ware.] Unca- tious; unwary.

WA'RELY. adv. [from ware.] Warily; cautiously; timorously.

WAR

They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did warely keep.

Spenser.

WARFARE. n. f. [war and fare.] Military service; military life; state of contest and solicitude.

In the wilderness

He shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death.

Milton.

Faithful hath been your warfare, and of God
Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause.

Milton.

Tully, when he read the Tactics, was thinking on the bar, which was his field of battle: the knowledge of warfare is thrown away on a general who does not make use of what he knows.

Dryden.

The state of christians, even when they are not actually persecuted, is a perpetual state of warfare and voluntary sufferings.

Atterbury.

The scripture has directed us to refer these mis-carriages in our christian warfare to the power of three enemies.

Rogers.

To WARFARE. v. n. [from the noun.] To lead a military life.

That was the only amulet, in that credulous war-faring age, to escape dangers in battles.

Camden.

WARHABLE. adj. [war, and habile, from habilis, Lat. or able.] Military; fit for war.

The weary Britons, whose warhable youth
Was by Maximilian lately led away,

With wretched miseries and woeful ruth,
Were to those Pagans made an open prey.

Spenser.

WARILY. adv. [from wary.] Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wise fore-thought.

The charge thereof unto a courteous sprite

Commended was who thereby did attend,

And warily awaited day and night,

From other covetous fiends it to defend.

Spenser.

The change of laws, especially concerning matters of religion, must be warily proceeded in.

Hooker.

So rich a prize could not so warily be fenced, but that Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low Countrymen, have laid in their own barns part of the Spaniards harvest.

Heylin.

They searched diligently, and concluded warily.

Sprat.

It will concern a man to treat conscience awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids.

South.

WARINESS. n. f. [from wary.] Caution; prudent forethought; timorous scrupulousness.

For your own conscience he gives innocence,
But for your fame a discreet wariness.

Donne.

It will deserve our special care and wariness to deliver our thoughts in this manner.

Hammond.

To determine what are little things in religion, great wariness is to be used.

Sprat.

The path was so very slippery, the shade so exceeding gloomy, and the whole wood so full of echoes, that they were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection, and silence.

Addison.

Most men have so much of ill-nature, or of wariness, as not to sooth the vanity of the ambitious man.

Addison.

I look upon it to be a most clear truth; and expressed it with more wariness and reserve than was necessary.

Atterbury.

WARK. n. f. [anciently used for work; whence bul-wark.] Building.

Thou findest fault where any's to be found,
And buildest strong wark upon a weak ground.

Spenser.

WARLIKE. adj. [war and like.] 1. Fit for war; disposed to war.

Relying on false hopes, thus to incense

Philips.

The warlike English.

WAR

2. Military; relating to war.

The great arch-angel from his warlike toil Surceas'd.

Milton.

WARLING. n. f. [from war.] This word is I believe only found in the following adage, and seems to mean, one often quarrelled with.

Better be an old man's darling than a young man's warling.

Camden.

WARLOCK. } n. f. [wardlook, Islandick, WARLUCK. { a charm; peplog, Saxon, an evil spirit. This etymology was communicated by Mr. Wife.] A male witch; a wizzard.

Warluck in Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar suppose to be conversant with spirits, as a woman who carries on the same commerce is called a witch: he is supposed to have the invulnerable quality which Dryden mentions, who did not understand the word.

He was no warluck, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron free or lead free.

Dryden.

WARM. adj. [warm, Gothick; peapm, Saxon; warm, Dutch.]

1. Not cold, though not hot; heated to a small degree.

He stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

2 Kings.

Main ocean flow'd not idle, but with warm
Prolifick humour soft'ning all her globe.

Milton.

We envy not the warmer clime that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies.

Addison.

2. Zealous; ardent.

I never thought myself so warm in any party's cause as to deserve their money.

Pope.

Each warm with springs mutual from the heart.

Pope.

Scaliger in his poetics is very warm against it.

Broome.

3. Habitually passionate; ardent; keen.

4. Violent; furious; vehement.

Welcome day-light; we shall have warm work on't:

The Moor will 'gage

His utmost forces on his next assault,
To win a queen and kingdom.

Dryden.

5. Busy in action; heated with action.

I hate the ling'ring summons to attend,
Death all at once would be a nobler end;

Fate is unkind: methinks a general
Should warm, and at the head of armies fall.

Dryden.

6. Fanciful; enthusiastick.

If there be a sober and a wise man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant fancy in the world? If there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively.

Locke.

7. Vigorous; sprightly.

Now warm in youth, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom.

Pope.

To WARM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.

It shall be for a man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself.

Isaiab.

The mounted sun

Shot down direct his fervid rays, to warm
Earth's inmost womb.

Milton.

These soft fires, with kindly heat
Of various influence, foment and warm.

Milton.

2. To heat mentally; to make vehement.

The action of Homer being more full of vigour than that of Virgil, is more pleasing to the reader: one warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire all at once, and never intermits his heat.

Dryden.

To WARM. v. n. To grow less cold.

There shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it.

Isaiab.

WAR

WARMINCPAN. n. f. [warm and pan.]

A covered brass pan for warming a bed by means of hot coals.

WARMINGSTONE. n. f. [warm and stone.]

To stones add the warming-stone, digged in Cornwall, which being well heated at the fire retains warmth a great while, and hath been found to give ease in the internal hæmorrhoids.

Ray.

WARMLY. adv. [from warm.]

1. With gentle heat.

There the warming sun first warmly smote
The open field.

Milton.

2. Eagerly; ardently.

Now I have two right honest wives;
One to Atreides I will send,

And t'other to my Trojan friend;
Each prince shall thus with honour have

What both so warmly seem to crave.

Prior.

The ancients expect you should do them right in the account you intend to write of their characters: I hope you think more warmly than ever of that design.

Pope.

WARMNESS. } n. f. [from warm.]

WARMTH. }

1. Gentle heat.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my goal;
from the loathed warmth whereof deliver me.

Shakspere.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun encreasing than the hot herbs have; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot.

Bacon.

He vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth,
Throughout the fluid mass.

Milton.

Here kindly warmth their mounting juice incements

The nobler tastes, and more exalted scents.

Addison.

2. Zeal; passion; fervour of mind.

What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

Shakspere.

Our duties towards God and man we should perform with that unfeigned integrity which belongs to christian piety; with that temper and sobriety which becomes christian prudence and charity; with that warmth and affection which agrees with christian zeal.

Sprat.

Your opinion, that it is entirely to be neglected, would have been my own, had it been my own case; but I felt more warmth here than I did when first I saw his book against myself.

Pope.

The best patriots, by seeing with what warmth and zeal the smallest corruptions are defended, have been wearied into silence.

Davenant.

3. Fancifulness; enthusiasm.

The same warmth of head disposes men to both.

Temple.

To WARN. v. a. [warnian, Saxon; warrenen, Dutch; warna, Swedish; varna, Islandick.]

1. To caution against any fault or danger; to give previous notice of ill.

What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel?
And sooth the devil that I warn thee from?

Shakspere.

The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen, so that it warns while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie so close and low, that though you have ears to hear, yet you shall not hear.

South.

Juturna warns the Daunian chief
Of Lausus' danger, urging swift relief.

Dryden.

He had chidden the rebellious winds for obeying the command of their usurping master; he had warned them from the seas; he had beaten down the billows.

Dryden.

If we consider the mistakes in men's disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations; this we are the more carefully to be warned of, because the arts of improving it have been made the business of men's study.

Locke.

The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son,
The sad examples which he ought to shun

Prior.

Describ'd.

W A R

When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
Perhaps he seem'd above the criticks law,
And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw.

Pope.

2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.

Cornelius was warned from God, by an holy angel, to send for thee.

AEs.

3. To inform previously of good or bad.
He wonders to what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before.

Shakspeare.

He charg'd the soldiers, with preventing care,
Their flags to follow, and their arms prepare,
Warn'd of th' ensuing fight, and bade 'em hope the war.

Dryden.

Man, who knows not hearts, should make examples,
Which like a warning-piece must be shot off,
To fright the rest from crimes.

Dryden.

4. Milton put no preposition before the thing.

Our first parents had been warn'd
The coming of their secret foe, and 'scap'd
His mortal snare.

Paradise Lost.

W A R N I N G. n. f. [from warn.]

1. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.

I will thank the Lord for giving me warning in the night.

Psalms.

He, groaning from the bottom of his breast,
This warning in these mournful words express'd.

Dryden.

Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Could warning make the world more just or wise.

Dryden.

You have fairer warning than others who are unexpectedly cut off, and so have a better opportunity, as well as greater engagements, to provide for your latter end.

Wake.

A true and plain relation of my misfortunes may be of use and warning to credulous maids, never to put too much trust in deceitful men.

Swift.

2. Previous notice: in a sense indifferent.

Suppose he have a more leisurely death, that some disease give him warning of its approach, yet perhaps he will not understand that warning, but will still flatter himself, as very often sick people do, with hopes of life to the last.

Duty of Man.

Death called up an old man, and bade him come; the man excus'd himself, that it was a great journey to take upon so short a warning.

L'Estrange.

I saw, with some disdain, more nonsense than either I, or as bad a poet, could have crammed into it at a month's warning; in which time it was wholly written.

Dryden.

W A R P. n. f. [pearn, Sax. werp, Dutch.]

That order of thread in a thing woven that crosses the woof.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as it is in the warp and the woof of texture, more inward or more outward.

Bacon.

To W A R P. v. n. [pearnan, Sax. werpen, Dutch, to throw; whence we sometimes say, the work casts.]

1. To change from the true situation by intestine motion; to change the position of one part to another.

This fellow will but join you together as they join waincot, then one of you will prove a shrunk pannel, and, like green timber, warp.

Shakspeare.

They clamp one piece of wood to the end of another piece, to keep it from casting or warping.

Moxon.

2. To lose its proper course or direction.

There's our commission
From which we would not have you warp.

Shakspeare.

This is strange! methinks
My favour here begins to warp.
All attest this doctrine, that the Pope can give

Shakspeare.

W A R

away the right of any sovereign, if he shall never so little warp.

Dryden.

This we should do as directly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible.

Norris.

3. To turn. I know not well the meaning here.

The potent rod

Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day
Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a pitchy cloud
Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung Like night.

Milton.

To W A R P. v. a.

1. To contract; to shrivel.
2. To turn aside from the true direction.

This first avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind;
Nor the frail texture of the female kind Betray'd my virtue.

Dryden.

Not foreign or domestick treachery
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree.

Dryden.

A great argument of the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of the word of God.

Locke.

I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy, since my first entering upon it.

Addison.

Not warp'd by passion, aw'd by rumour,
Nor grave through pride, or gay through folly;
An equal mixture of good-humour,
And sensible soft melancholy.

Swift.

A constant watchfulness against all those prejudices that might warp the judgment aside from truth.

Watts.

Aristotle's moral, rhetorical, and political writings, in which his excellent judgment is very little warp'd by logical subtleties, are far the most useful part of his philosophy.

Beattie.

3. It is used by Shakspeare to express the effect of frost.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky!

Thou dost not bite so nigh

As benefits forgot:

Though thou the waters warp,

Thy sting is not so sharp

As friends remember'd not.

As you like it.

To W A R R A N T. v. n. [garantir, Fr.]

1. To support or maintain; to attest.

She needed not disdain any service, though never so mean, which was warranted by the sacred name of father.

Sidney.

He that readeth unto us the scriptures delivereth all the mysteries of faith, and not any thing amongst them all more than the mouth of the Lord doth warrant.

Hooker.

If this internal light be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it, and we may safely receive it for true.

Locke.

2. To give authority.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel.

Shakspeare.

3. To justify.

How can any one warrant himself in the use of those things against such suspicions, but in the trust he has in the common honesty and truth of men in general?

South.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants and that wisdom guides;
All else is tow'ring frenzy and distraction.

Addison.

4. To exempt; to privilege; to secure.

If my coming, whom, she said, he feared, as soon as he knew me by the armour, had not warranted her from that near approaching cruelty.

Sidney.

These thoughts cannot, in this your loneliness, warrant you from suspicion in others, nor defend you from melancholy in yourself.

Sidney.

I'll warrant him from drowning.

Shakspeare.

In a place

Less warranted than this, or less secure,
I cannot be, that I should fear to change it.

Milton.

5. To declare upon surety.

What a galled neck have we here! Look ye, mine's as smooth as silk, I warrant ye.

L'Estrange.

W A R

The Moors king

Is safe enough, I warrant him for one.

Dryden.

W A R R A N T. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A writ conferring some right or authority.

Are you now going to dispatch this deed?

For warrants are already issued out.

Dryden.

3. A secure inviolable grant.

His promise is our plain warrant, that in his name what we ask we shall receive.

Hooker.

4. A justificatory commission.

Is this a warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as have been and are put in use for the establishment of that cause?

Hooker.

When at any time they either wilfully break any commandment, or ignorantly mistake it, that is no warrant for us to do so likewise.

Kettwell.

5. Attestation.

The place of paradise might be seen unto Moses, and unto the prophets who succeeded him; both which I take for my warrant to guide me in this discovery.

Raleigh.

His warrant does the christian faith defend;
On that relying, all their quarrels end.

Waller.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore, that this might so enter as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of Omnipotence.

South.

6. Right; legality. Obsolete.

I attach thee

For an abuser of the world, a practicer
Of arts inhibited and out of warrant.

Shakspeare.

Therefore to horse,

And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away: there's warrant in that theft,
Which steals itself when there's no mercy left.

Shakspeare.

W A R R A N T A B L E. adj. [from warrant.]

Justifiable; defensible.

To purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know.

Brown.

His meals are coarse and short, his employment warrantable, his sleep certain and refreshing.

South.

If I can mend my condition by any warrantable industry, the way is fair and open; and that's a privilege every reasonable creature has in his commission.

L'Estrange.

W A R R A N T A B L E N E S S. n. f. [from warrantable.] Justifiableness.

By the foil thereof you may see the nobleness of my desire to you, and the warrantableness of your favour to me.

Sidney.

W A R R A N T A B L Y. adv. [from warrantable.] Justifiably.

The faith which God requires is only this, that he will certainly reward all those that believe in him, and obey his commandments; but for the particular application of this faith to ourselves, that deserves no more of our assent, nor can indeed warrantably have it, than what is founded upon the serious consideration of our own performances.

Wake.

W A R R A N T E R. n. f. [from warrant.]

1. One who gives authority.

2. One who gives security.

W A R R A N T I S E. n. f. [warrantise, law Latin; from warrant.] Authority; security.

1. [In the common law.] A promise made in a deed by one man unto another, for himself and his heirs, to secure him and his heirs against all men, for the enjoying of any thing agreed of between them.

Cowell.

2. Authority; justificatory mandate.

Her obsequies have been so far enlarg'd

As we have warranty: her death was doubtful; And, but that great command o'erflows the order, She should in ground unanctify'd have lodg'd Till the last trump.

Shakspeare.

In the use of those epithets we have the warranty and content of all the churches, since they ever had a liturgy.

Taylor.

If they disobey any precept, that is no excuse to us, nor gives us any warranty, for company's sake, to disobey likewise.

Keblewell.

3. Security.

Every one cannot distinguish between fine and mixed silver: those who have had the care and government of politick societies, introduced coinage as a remedy; the stamp was a warranty of the publick, that under such a denomination they should receive a piece of such a weight and fineness.

Locke.

To WARRA'Y. v. a. [from war; or from guerroyer, old Fr.] To make war upon.

A word very elegant and expressive, though obsolete.

But Ebranc salv'd both their infancies With noble deeds, and warra'y'd on Brunchild In Hainault, where yet of his victories Brave monuments remain, which yet that land envys.

Spenser.

Of these a mighty people shortly grew, And puissant kings, which all the world warraid, And to themselves all nations did subdue.

Spenser.

This continual, cruel, civil war, The which myself against myself do make, Whilst my weak powers of passions warraid are, No skill can stint, nor reason can assuage. Six years were run since first in martial guise The christian lords warraid the eastern land.

Fairfax.

WARRE. adj. [pœrn, Saxon.] Worse. Obsolete.

—That we have, sir John: our watchword, hem!
boys. Shakspeare.

A watchword every minute of the night goeth about the walls, to testify their vigilancy. Sandy.

WA'TER. n. f. [waeter, Dutch; water,
Saxon.]

1. Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all savour or taste; and it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal dia-meters, and of equal specifick gravities, as Dr. Cheyne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious on all sides. Their smoothness accounts for their sliding easily over one another's surfaces; their sphericity keeps them also from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their friction in sliding over one another is rendered the least possible. Their hardness accounts for the incompressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The porosity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion. Quincy.

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dry'd their water-flowing tears. Shaksp.

Your water is a fore decayer of your whorl dead body. Shakspeare.

The sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd,
But I had not so much of man in me;

But all my mother came into mine eyes,
And gave me up to tears. Shakspeare.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We write in water. Shakspeare.

Those healths will make thee and thy state look ill, Timon: here's that which is too weak to be a finer, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shakspeare.

Water is the chief ingredient in all the animal fluids and solids; for a dry bone, distilled, affords a great quantity of insipid water: therefore water seems to be proper drink for every animal. Arbut.

2. The sea.

Travel by land or by water. Common Prayer.
By water they found the sea, westward from Peru, always very calm. Abbot.

Wherewith we catch other's mind. Carew.

White seem'd her robes, yet woven so they were,
As snow and gold together had been wrought. Dryden.

These purple vests were wav'd by Dardan dames. Dryden.

Dan Pope, for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has wav'd
A filken web, and ne'er shall fade
Its colours; gently has he laid
The mantle's o'er thy sad distress:
And Venus shall the texture bless. Prior.

2. To unite by intermixture.

When religion was woven into the civil government, and flourished under the protection of the emperors, men's thoughts and discourses were full of secular affairs; but, in the three first centuries of christianity, men who embraced this religion had given up all their interests in this world, and lived in a perpetual preparation for the next. Addison.

3. To interpose; to insert.

The duke be here to-night! the better! best!
This weaves itself perforce into my business. Shakspeare.

To WEAVE. v. n. To work with a loom.

WEA'VER. n. f. [from weave.] One who makes thread into cloth.

Upon these taxations,
The clothiers all, not able to maintain
The many to them 'longing, have put off
The spinners, carders, fullers, weavers. Shakspeare.

My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope. Job.

The weaver may cast religion upon what loom he please. Howel.

Her flag aloft spreads ruffling to the wind,
And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire:
The weaver, charm'd with what his loom design'd,
Goes on to see, and knows not to retire. Dryden.
WEA'VERFISH. n. f. [araneus piscis, Lat.]
A fish. Ainsworth.

WEB. n. f. [pebba, Sax.]

1. Texture; any thing woven.
Penelope, for her Ulysses' sake,
Devis'd a web her wooers to deceive;
In which the work that she all day did make,
The same at night she did again unweave. Spenser.
Staid at gate,
And heard within the goddess's elevate
A voice divine, as at her web she wrought, Subtle, and glorious, and past earthly thought. Chapman.

Spiders touch'd, seek their web's inmost part. Davies.

By day the web and loom,
And homely household task, shall be her doom. Dryden.

The fates, when they this happy web have spun,
Shall bless the sacred clue, and bid it smoothly run. Dryden.

2. Some part of a sword. Obsolete.
The sword, whereof the web was steel;
Pommel, rich stone; hilt, gold approv'd by touch. Fairfax.

3. A kind of dusky film that hinders the fight; suffusion.
This is the foul flibertigibbet; he gives the web and the pin, squints the eye, and makes the hairlip. Shakspeare.

WE'BBED. adj. [from web.] Joined by a film.

Such as are whole-footed, or whose toes are web- bed together, their legs are generally short, the most convenient size for swimming. Derham.

WE'BFOOTED. adj. [web and foot.] Pal-mipede; having films between the toes.
Webfooted fowls do not live constantly upon the land, nor fear to enter the water. Ray.

WE'BSTER. n. f. [pebyrne, Sax. a woman-weaver.] A weaver. Obsolete.
After local names, the most in number have been derived from occupations; as, Taylor, Web- ster, Wheeler. Camden.

To WED. v. a. [pedian, Sax.]

1. To marry; to take for husband or wife.
If one by one you wedded all the world,
Or, from the all that are, took something good
To make a perfect woman; she you kill'd
Would be unparallel'd. Shakspeare.
Never did thy beauty, since the day
I saw thee first, and wedded thee, adorn'd
With all perfection, so inflame my senses. Milton.
Chloe, blind to wit and worth,
Weds the rich dulness of some son of earth. Pope.

2. To join in marriage.
In Syracuse was I born, and wed
Unto a woman happy but for me. Shakspeare.
Then I shall be no more;
And Adam, wedded to another Eve, Shall live with her. Milton.

The woman in us still prosecutes a deceit like that begun in the garden; and our understandings are wedded to an Eve, as fatal as the mother of their miseries. Glanville.

3. To unite for ever.
Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity. Shakspeare.

4. To take for ever.
Though the principal men of the house of commons were again elected to serve in this parliament, yet they were far from wedding the war, or taking themselves to be concerned to make good any declaration made by the former. Clarendon.
They positively and concernedly wedded his cause. Clarendon.

5. To unite by love or fondness.
Men are wedded to their lusts, and resolved upon a wicked course; and so it becomes their interest to wish there were no God. Tilloison.

W E D

To WED. v. n. To contract matrimony.

When I shall wed,
That lord whose hand shall take my plight, shall carry
Half my love with him, half my care and duty. Shakspeare.

To love, to wed,
For Hymen's rites, and for the marriage bed,
You were ordain'd. Suckling.
Nor took I Guiscard, by blind fancy led,
Or hasty choice as many women wed;
But with deliberate care. Dryden.

WE'DDING. n. f. [from wed.] Marriage;
nuptials; the nuptial ceremony.

Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day. Shakspeare.

I will dance and eat plums at your wedding. Shakspeare.

Let her beauty be her wedding dower;
For me and my possessions she esteems not. Shakspeare.

When my son was entered into his wedding- chamber, he fell down and died. 2 Esdras.
These three country bills agree, that each wed- ding produces four children. Graunt.
His friends were invited to come and make merry with him, and this was to be the wedding- feast. L'Esrange.

If she affirmed herself a virgin, she must on her wedding-day, and in her wedding cloaths perform the ceremony of going alone into the den, and stay an hour with the lion. Swift.

A woman seldom asks advice before she has bought her wedding-cloaths. Spectator.

WEDGE. n. f. [vegge, Danish; wegge,
Dutch.]

1. A body which, having a sharp edge continually growing thicker, is used to cleave timber; one of the mechanical powers.

A barbarous troop of clownish fone
The honour of these noble boughs down threw;
Under the wedge I heard the trunk to groan. Spenser.

The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in the cleaving of wood. Wilkins.
He left his wedge within the cloven oak. Dryden.

The oak let many a heavy groan, when he was cleft with a wedge of his own timber. Arbutnot.

2. A mass of metal.
As sparkles from the anvil us'd to fly,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are swaid. Spenser.
When I saw a goodly Babylonish garment, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them. Joshua.

3. Any thing in the form of a wedge.
In warlike musters they appear,
In rhombs, and wedges, and half-moons, and wings. Milton.

To WEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cleave with a wedge.
My heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twain,
Left Hector, or my father, should perceive me. Shakspeare.

2. To drive as a wedge is driven.
Where have you been broiling?—
—Among the crowd i' th' abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more. Shakspeare.

3. To force as a wedge forces.
Part
In common rang'd in figure wedge their way, Intelligent of seasons. Milton.

4. To fasten by wedges.
Wedge on the keenest scythes,
And give us steeds that snort against the foe. A. Philips.

5. To fix as a wedge.
Your wit will not so soon out as another man's will; it is strongly wedged up in a blockhead. Shakspeare.

W E E

Sergeisthus in the centaur soon he pass'd, Wedg'd in the rocky shoals and sticking fast. Dryden.

What impulse can be propagated from one particle, entombed and wedged in the very center of the earth, to another in the center of Saturn? Bentley.

WE'DLOCK. n. f. [ped and lac, Saxon, marriage and gift.] Marriage; matrimony.

She doth stray about
By holy crosses where she kneels and prays
For happy wedlock hours. Shakspeare.

Sirrah, your brother is legitimate;
Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him,
And if she did play false the fault was hers. Shakspeare.

Can wedlock know so great a curse,
As putting husbands out to nurse? Cleveland.

He his happiest choice too late Shall meet already link'd, and wedlock-bound
To a fell adversary. Milton.

May not a prison or a grave,
Like wedlock, honour's title have? Denham.

One thought the sex's prime felicity
Was from the bonds of wedlock to be free,
And uncontroll'd to give accounts to none. Dryden.

A man determined, about the fiftieth year of his age, to enter upon wedlock. Addison.

WE'DNESDAY. n. f. [pobenydag, Saxon; odensday, Swedish; woensday, Dutch;
wensday, Islandick.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothick nations from Woden or Odin.

Where is the honour of him that died on Wed- nesday? Shakspeare.

The offices of prayer he had in his church, not only upon the Sundays, and festivals, and their eves, as also Wednesdaies and Fridaies. Fell.

WEE. adj. [a Saxon word of the same root with weeing, Dutch; wenig, German.] Little; small: whence the word weasel or weasel is used for little; as, a weasel face, In Scotland it denotes small or little: as wee ane, a little one, or child;
a wee bit, a little bit.

Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's paring knife?—No, forsooth; he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard. Shakspeare.

WE'ECHERM. n. f. [This is often written witch elm.] A species of elm.

A cion of a weechelm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the brim of a hat. Bacon.

WEED. n. f. [peod, Saxon, tares.]

1. An herb noxious or useless.
If he had an immoderate ambition, which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon.

He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds. Sandys.

Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds,
While sects, like locusts, did destroy the seeds. Denham.

Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. Merr.

When they are cut, let them lie, if weedy, to kill the weeds. Merriman.

Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some tincture of the man. Prior.

If they are often seen to lose that little religion they were taught in their youth, 'tis no more to be wondered at, than to see a little flower choked and killed amongst rank weeds. Low.

2. [peoda, Saxon; waed, Dutch.] A garment; clothes; habit; dress. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds, the mourning dress of a widow.

W E E

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears.

Sidney.

Neither is it any man's business to cloath all his servants with one weed; nor theirs to cloath themselves so, if left to their own judgments.

Hooker.

They meet upon the way

An aged fire, in long black weeds yclad;

His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray,

And by his belt his book he hanging had.

Spenser.

Livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears, so called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure.

Spenser.

The snake throws her enamell'd skin,

Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in.

Shakspeare.

Throngs of knights, and barons bold,

In weeds of peace high triumphs hold,

With store of ladies.

Milton.

Lately your fair hand in woman's weed

Wrapp'd my glad head.

Waller.

3. It is used by Chapman for the upper garment.

The morning, in her throne of gold,

Survaid the vast world, by whose orient light

The nymph adorn'd me with attires as bright;

Her own hands putting on both shirt and weede.

Chapman.

To WEED. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rid of noxious plants.

When you sow the berries of bays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed giveth them shade.

Bacon.

Your seedlings having stood till June, bestow a weeding or a slight howing upon them.

Mortimer.

2. To take away as noxious plants.

Oh Marcius,

Each word thou'lt spoke hath weeded from my heart

A root of ancient envy.

Shakspeare.

Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, fill so many pages of our controversial writings, that, were those weeded out, many volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper.

Dec. of Piety.

3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.

He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Elaiana, and manumized it from that most dangerous confederacy.

Howel.

4. To root out vice.

Wise fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children ill things, as they were before in grafting in them learning.

Ascham.

One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any signs that ever they had been there.

Locke.

WE'EDER. n. f. [from weed.] One that takes away any thing noxious.

A weeder out of his proud adversaries,

A liberal rewarder of his friends.

Shakspeare.

WE'EDHOOK. n. f. [weed and hook.] A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.

In May get a weedhook, a crotch, and a glove,

And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love.

Tusser.

WE'EDLESS. adj. [from weed.] Free from weeds; free from any thing useless or noxious.

So many weedless paradises be,

Which of themselves produce no venomous sin.

Donne.

A crystal brook,

When troubled most it does the bottom show;

*Tis weedless all above, and rockless all below.

Dryden.

WE'EDY, adj. [from weed.]

1. Consisting of weeds.

There on the pendant boughs her coronet weed

Clamb'ring to hang, an envious sliwer broke,

When down her weedy trophies and herself

Fell in the weeping brook.

Shakspeare.

2. Abounding with weeds.

Hid in a weedy lake all night I lay,

Secure of safety.

Dryden.

If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground.

Mortimer.

W E E

WEEK. n. f. [peoc, Sax. weke, Dutch; vecka, Swedish.] The space of seven days.

Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also.

Genesis.

The division of time by weeks hath been universally observed in the world, not only amongst the civilized, but likewise among the most barbarous nations.

Wilkins.

WEEKDAY. n. f. [week and day.] Any day not Sunday.

One solid dish his weekday meal affords,

An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's.

Pope.

WEEKLY. adj. [from week.] Happening, produced, or done once a week; hebdomadary.

The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses.

Hooker.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,

And multiply'd with heirs their weekly bill.

Dryden.

Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers, than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-church, and then loading the latter with calumny.

Swift.

WEEKLY. adv. [from week.] Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.

These are obliged to perform divine worship in their turns weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons.

Ayliffe.

WEEL. n. f. [pœl, Saxon.]

1. A whirlpool.

2. [perhaps from willow.] A twiggen snare or trap for fish.

To WEEN. v. n. [penan, Saxon; waenen, Dutch.] To think; to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.

Ah lady dear, quoth then the gentle knight,

Well may I ween your grief is wond'rous great.

Spenser.

So well it her befits, that ye would ween

Some angel she had been.

Spenser.

When weening to return whence they did stray,

They cannot find that path which first was shown;

But wander to and fro in ways unknown,

Furthest from end then, when they nearest ween.

Spenser.

Thy father, in pity of my hard distress,

Levied an army, weening to redeem

And reinstat me in the diadem.

Shakspeare.

Ween you of better luck,

I mean in perjur'd witness, than your master,

Whose minister you are, while here he liv'd

Upon this naughty earth.

Shakspeare.

They ween'd

That self-same day, by fight or by surprize,

To win the mount of God; and on his throne

To set the envier of his state, the proud

Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.

Milton.

To WEEP. v. n. pret. and part. pass. wept, wept. [peopan, Saxon.]

1. To show sorrow by tears.

In that sad time

My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;

And what these sorrows could not hence exhale,

That beauty hath, and made them blind with weep- ing.

Shakspeare.

I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmannerly sadness in his youth.

Shakspeare.

The days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.

Deuteronomy.

Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it?

Taylor.

Away! with women weep, and leave me here,

Fix'd like a man, to die without a tear,

Or save or slay us both.

Dryden.

A corps it was, but whose it was, unknown;

Yet mov'd, howe'er, she made the case her own;

Took the bad omen of a shipwreck'd man,

As for a stranger wept.

Dryden.

W E E

When Darius wept over his army, that within a single age not a man of all that confluence would be left alive, Artabanus improved his meditation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with so many evils, that every one should wish himself dead long before.

Wake.

2. To shed tears from any passion.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,

And I for sorrow sung,

That such a king should play bo-peep,

And go the fools among.

Shakspeare.

3. To lament; to complain.

They weep unto me, saying, Give us flesh that we may eat.

Numbers.

To WEEP. v. a.

1. To lament with tears; to bewail; to bemoan.

If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes.

Shakspeare.

Nor was I near to close his dying eyes,

To wash his wounds, to weep his obsequies.

Dryden.

We wand'ring go

Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe.

Pope.

2. To shed moisture.

Thus was this place

A happy rural seat of various view,

Groves whose rich trees wept od'rous gums and balm.

Milton.

3. To drop.

Let India boast her plants; nor envy we

The weeping amber or the balmy tree,

While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,

And realms commanded which those trees adorn.

Pope.

4. To abound with wet.

Rye-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds.

Mortimer.

WE'EPER. n. f. [from weep.]

1. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bewailer; a mourner.

If you have served God in a holy life, send away the women and the weepers: tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much: if thou art alone, or with fitting company, die as thou shouldst; but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap.

Taylor.

Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,

What store of brine supply'd the weeper's eyes.

Dryden.

2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.

WE'ERISH. adj. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Ascham in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tastes, it means insipid; applied to the body, weak and washy: here it seems to mean, sour, furly.

A voice not soft, weak, piping, womanish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a countenance not weerish and crabbed, but fair and comely.

Ascham.

To WEET. v. n. preterit wot or wote. [pitan, Sax. weten, Dut.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge. Obsolete.

Him the prince with gentle court did board;

Sir knight, mought I of you this court'ly read,

To weet why on your shield, so goodly scord'd,

Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?

Spenser.

I bind,

On pain of punishment, the world to weet

We stand up peerless.

Shakspeare.

But well I weet thy cruel wrong

Adorns a nobler poet's song.

Prior.

WE'ETLESS. adj. [from weet.] Unknown.

Spenser.

WE'EVIL. n. f. [pepel, Sax. wevel, Dut. curculio, Lat.] A grub.

A worm called a weevil, bred under ground, feedeth upon roots, as parsnips and carrots.

Bacon.

Corn is so innocent from breeding of mice, that it doth not produce the very weevils that live in it and consume it. Bentley.

WE'EZEL, n. f. [See WEASEL.]

I suck melancholy out of a song, as a weazel sucks eggs. Shakspeare.

The corn-devouring weazel here abides, And the wise ant. Dryden.

WEFT. The old preterit and part. pass. from TO WAVE. Spenser.

WEFT, n. f. [guave, Fr. vofa, to wander, Islandick; vagus, Latin.]

1. That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manor.

His horse, it is the herald's weft;

No, 'tis a mare. Ben Jonson.

2. It is in Bacon for waft, a gentle blast.

The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest sort of smells are best in a weft afar off. Bacon.

WEFT, n. f. [perfta, Sax.] The woof of cloth.

WEFTAGE, n. f. [from weft.] Texture.

The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed. Grew.

TO WEIGH, v. a. [pægan, Sax. weyben, Dutch.]

1. To examine by the balance.

Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved so as not to be wet nor waited, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous, till the river cometh to its height. Bacon.

Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales, Wherein all things created first he weigh'd. Milton.

She does not weigh her meat in a pair of scales, but the weights it in a much better balance; so much as gives a proper strength to her body, and renders it able and willing to obey the soul. Law.

2. To be equivalent to in weight.

They that must weigh out my afflictions, They that my trust must grow to, live not here; They are, as all my comforts are, far hence. Shakspeare.

By the exsuction of the air out of a glass vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.

3. To pay, allot, or take by weight.

They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. Zechariah.

4. To raise; to take up the anchor.

They having freight Their ships with spoil enough, weigh anchor straight. Chapman.

Here he left me, ling'ring here delay'd His parting kiss, and there his anchor weigh'd. Dryden.

5. To examine; to balance in the mind; to consider.

Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.

I have an equal balance justly weigh'd What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,

And find our griefs heavier than our offences. Shakspeare.

The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed. Bacon.

His majesty's speedy march left that design to be better weighed and digested. Clarendon.

You chose a retreat, and not till you had maturely weighed the advantages of rising higher with the hazards of the fall. Dryden.

All grant him prudent; prudence interest weighs, And interest bids him seek your love and praise. Dryden.

The mind, having the power to suspend the satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to examine them on all sides, and weigh them with others. Locke.

He is the only proper judge of our perfections, who weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions. Spektator.

6. To compare by the scales.

Here in nice balance truth with gold she weighs, And solid pudding against empty praise. Pope.

7. To regard; to consider as worthy of notice.

I weigh not you—

You do not weigh me; that is, you care not for me. Shakspeare.

8. TO WEIGH down. To overbalance.

Fear weighs down faith with shame. Daniel.

9. TO WEIGH down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.

In thy blood will reign

A melancholy damp of cold and dry, To weigh thy spirit down. Milton.

Her father's crimes

Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers; A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd, His children murder'd. Dryden.

My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep. Addison.

Excellent persons, weighed down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach. Addison.

TO WEIGH, v. n.

1. To have weight.

Exactly weighing, and strangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter. Brown.

2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.

This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.

A wise man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition. Addison.

3. To raise the anchor.

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies, And shoot quick lightning, weigh, my boys, he cries. Dryden.

4. To bear heavily; to press hard.

Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd, And with some sweet oblivious antidote Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff Which weighs upon the heart? Shakspeare.

5. To sink by its own weight.

The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overladen, weigh down. Bacon.

WEIGHED, adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.

In an embassy of weight, choice was made of some sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state matters. Bacon.

WEIGHER, n. f. [from weigh.] He who weighs.

WEIGHT, n. f. [piht, Saxon.]

1. Quantity measured by the balance.

Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon.

Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer; Nature's too kind, and justice too severe: Speak for us both, and to the balance bring, On either side, the father and the king: Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee; Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me. Dryden.

So was every thipg of the temple, even to the weight of a flesh hook, given to David, as you may see. Lesley.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body. Arbutnot.

2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.

Just balances, just weights, shall ye have. Leviticus.

Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weight their drugs with pieces of money. Arbutnot.

When the balance is entirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run entirely into one. Swift.

3. Ponderous mass.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them; otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth; as we see, in horse-races, men are curious to foresee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force. Bacon.

Wolfey, who from his own great store might have A palace or a college for his grave, Lies here interr'd: Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weigh Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit: If thus thou liest neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shreds of thee? Bishop Carst.

All their confidence

Under the weight of mountains buried deep. Milton.

Pride, like a gulf, swallows us up; our very virtues, when so leavened, becoming weights and plummetts to sink us to the deeper ruin. Gow. of the Tong.

Then shun the ill; and know, my dear, Kindness and constancy will prove

The only pillars fit to bear So vast a weight as that of love. Prior.

4. Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

Heaviness or weight is not here considered as being such a natural quality, whereby condensed bodies do of themselves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be measured. Wilkins.

The shaft, that slightly was impress'd, Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd Drove through his neck. Dryden.

What natural agent impel them so strongly with a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are falling? Bentley.

5. Pressure; burden; overwhelming power.

Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight. Shakspeare.

As some of the angels did scarce sooner receive than break the laws of obedience; so some men, by an unhappy imitation of such angels, are more ready to slander the weight of their yoke than to bear it. Holyday.

So shall the world go on, To good malignant, so bad men benign, Under her own weight groaning. Milton.

We must those, who groan beneath the weight Of age, disease, or want, commiserate. Denham.

The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon the people. L'Estrange.

Possession's load was grown so great, He sunk beneath the cumb'rous weights. Swift.

They are like so many weights upon our minds, that make us less able and less inclined to raise up our thoughts and affections to the things that are above. Low.

6. Importance; power; influence; efficacy; consequence; moment.

How to make ye suddenly an answer, In such a point of weight, so near mine honour, In truth I know not. Shakspeare.

If this right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, must not all be subject to it? Locke.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, other agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states. Locke.

An author's arguments lose their weight, when we are persuaded that he only writes for argument's sake. Addison.

W E L

See, Lord, the sorrows of my heart,
Ere yet it be too late;
And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give those sorrows weight. Spectator.
The solemnities that encompass the magistrate add dignity to all his actions, and weight to all his words. Atterbury.

WEIGHTILY. adv. [from weighty.]

1. Heavily; ponderously.
2. Solidly; importantly.

Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententious? Broom.

WEIGHTINESS. n. f. [from weighty.]

1. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness.
2. Solidity; force.

I fear I have dwelt longer on this passage than the weightiness of any argument in it requires. Locke.

3. Importance.

The apparent defect of her judgment, joined to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvel. Hayward.

WEIGHTLESS. adj. [from weight.] Light;
having no gravity.

How by him balanc'd in the weightless air?
Canst thou the wisdom of his works declare?

Sandys.

It must both weightless and immortal prove,
Because the centre of it is above. Dryden.

WEIGHTY. adj. [from weight.]

1. Heavy; ponderous.

You have already weary'd fortune so,
She cannot farther be your friend or foe,
But sits all breathless, and admires to feel
A fate so weighty that it stops her wheel. Dryden.

2. Important; momentous; efficacious.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakspeare.

It only forbids suits in lighter losses and indignities, such as our Lord there mentions, and making the law the instrument of revenge in weightier matters. Kettlewell.

No fool Pythagoras was thought:
Whilst he his weighty doctrines taught,
He made his list'ning scholars stand,
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand:
Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
Less friend to doctrine than to truth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the music of the spheres. Prior.

Thus spoke to my lady the knight full of care,
Let me have your advice in a weighty affair. Swift.

3. Rigorous; severe. Not in use.

If, after two days shine, Athens contains thee,
Attend our weightier judgment. Shakspeare.

WE'LAWAY. interj. [This I once believed a corruption of weal away, that is, happiness is gone: so Junius explained it;
but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, woe on woe. From welaway is formed by corruption welladay.] Alas.

Harrow now out, and welaway, he cried,
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light! Spens.
Ah, welaway, most noble lords, how can
Your cruel eyes endure so piteous sight? Spenser.
Welaway, the while I was so fond,
To leave the good that I had in hand. Spenser.

WE'LCOME. adj. [bien venu, Fr. pl- cume, Saxon; welkom, Dutch.]

1. Received with gladness; admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.

I serve you, madam:

Your graces are right welcome. Shakspeare.

He, though not of the plot, will like it,
And wish it should proceed; for, unto men
Prest with their wants, all change is ever welcome. Ben Jonson.

Here let me earn my bread,
Till oft invocated death

Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton.

He that knows how to make those he converses with easy, has found the true art of living, and being welcome, and valued every where. Locke.

W E L

2. To bid WELCOME. To receive with professions of kindness.

Some stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome. Bacon.

WE'LCOME. interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.

Welcome, he said,

O long expected, to my dear embrace! Dryden.

Welcome, great monarch, to your own. Dryden.

WE'LCOME. n. f.

1. Salutation of a new comer.

Welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out sighing. Shakspeare.

Leontes opening his free arms, and weeping
His welcome forth. Shakspeare.

2. Kind reception of a new comer.

I should be free from injuries, and abound as much in the true causes of welcomes, as I should find want of the effects thereof. Sidney.

I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome. Shakspeare.

Madam, new years may well expect to find Welcome from you, to whom they are so kind:

Still as they pass they court and smile on you,
And make your beauty, as themselves, seem new. Waller.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartiality keeps it, truth finds an entrance and a welcome too. South.

TO WELCOME. v. a. To salute a new comer with kindness.

I know no cause

Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard. Shakspeare.

They stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us. Bacon.

Thus we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and wish thee long. Milton.

To welcome home

His warlike brother, is Pirithous come. Dryden.

The lark and linnet strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

WELCOME to our house. n. f. [laetitia ma- rina, Latin.] An herb. Ainsworth.

WE'LCOMENESS. n. f. [from welcome.]
Gratefulness.

Our joys, after some centuries of years, may seem to have grown older, by having been enjoyed so many ages; yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the scores of their welcomeness, but by their perpetually equal, because infinite, distance from a period. Boyle.

WE'LCOMER. n. f. [from welcome.] The saluter or receiver of a new comer.

Farewel, thou woeful welcomer of glory! Shakspeare.

WELD, or Would. n. f. [luteola, Latin.]
Yellow weed, or diers weed.

TO WELD, for To wield. Spenser.

TO WELD. v. a. To beat one mass into another, so as to incorporate them.

Sparkling or welding heat is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and so weld or work in the doublings into one another. Moxon.

WE'LDER. n. f. [a term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from
To wield, to turn or manage: whence wielder, welder.] Manager; actual occu-pier.

Such immediate tenants have others under them,
and so a third and fourth in subordination, till it comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives miserably. Swift.

WELFARE. n. f. [well and fare.] Happiness; success; prosperity.

If friends to a government forbear their assistance, they put it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest. Addison.

Discretion is the perfection of reason: cunning is a kind of instinct that only looks out after our immediate interest and welfare. Spectator.

TO WELK. v. a. [Of this word in Spenser

I know not well the meaning: pealcan, in Saxon, is to roll; wolken, in German,
and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds; whence I suppose welk, or wilck, is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convolved body. Whilk is used for a small shellfish.] To cloud; to obscure. It seems in Spenser both active and neuter.

Now sad winter welcked hath the day,
And Phœbus weary of his yearly task,
Establish'd hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hark. Spenser.

As gentle shepherd in sweet eventide;
When ruddy Phœbus 'gins to welk in west,
Marks which do bite their hasty supper best. Spenser.

The welcked Phœbus 'gan avale
His weary wain. Spenser.

WE'LKED. adj. Set with protuberances.
Properly, I believe, welcked, from welck.

Methought his eyes

Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses, Horns welk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea. Shakspeare.

WE'LKIN. n. f. [from pealcan, to roll, or pelcen, clouds, Saxon.]

1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.

Ne in all the welkin was no cloud. Chaucer.

He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenser.

The swallow peeps out of her nest,
And cloudy welkin cleareth. Spenser.

Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood:
Amaze the welkin with your broken staves. Shaksp.

With feats of arms
From either end of heav'n the welkin burns. Milton.

Now my task is smoothly done,
I can fly or I can run
Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the bow'd welkin slow doth bend. Milton.

Their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips.

2. WELKIN Eye, is, I suppose, blue eye;
skycoloured eye.

Yet were it true
To say this boy were like me! Come, sir page, Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain. Shakspeare.

WELL. n. f. [pelle, poell, Saxon.]

1. A spring; a fountain; a source.

Begin then, sisters of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth spring. Milton.

As the root and branch are but one tree,
And well and stream do but one river make;
So if the root and well corrupted be,
The stream and branch the same corruption take. Davies.

2. A deep narrow pit of water.

Now up, now down, like buckets in a well,
The muscles are so many well-buckets; when one of them acts and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey. Dryden.

3. The cavity in which stairs are placed.

Hollow newelled stairs are made about a square hollow newel; suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of stairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel. Moxon.

TO WELL. v. n. [peallan, Saxon.] To spring; to issue as from a spring.

Thereby a crystal stream did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountain *well*led forth alway.
Spenser.

A dreary corse,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet *well*led fresh, alas!
Spenser.

Himself assists to lift him from the ground,
With clotted locks, and blood that well'd from out the wound.
Dryden.

From his two springs
Pure *well*ling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Dambea rolls his infant stream. Thomson.
To WELL. v. a. To pour any thing forth.

To her people wealth they forth do well,
And health to every foreign nation. Spenser.

WELL. adj. [Well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.]

1. Not sick; being in health.

Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a full flowing stomach. Shakspeare.

In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well.
Shakspeare.

While thou art well, thou mayest do much good;
but when thou art sick, thou canst not tell what thou shalt be able to do: it is not very much nor very good. Few men mend with sickness, as there are but few who by travel and a wandering life become devout. Taylor.

Men under irregular appetites never think themselves well, so long as they fancy they might be better, then from better they must rise to best.
L'Estrange.

'Tis easy for any, when well, to give advice to them that are not. Wake.

2. Happy.

Mark, we use
To say the dead are well. Shakspeare.

Holdings were so plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the landlord, who could get one to be his tenant. Carew.

Charity is made the constant companion and perfection of all virtues; and well it is for that virtue where it most enters and longest stays. Sprat.

3. Convenient; advantageous.

This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too if it extended itself to common conversation.
Locke.

It would have been well for Genoa, if she had followed the example of Venice, in not permitting her nobles to make any purchase of lands in the dominions of a foreign prince. Addison.

4. Being in favour.

He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the Fourth. Dryden.

5. Recovered from any sickness or mis- fortune.

I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well.
Shakspeare.

Just thoughts and modest expectations are easily satisfied. If we don't over-rate our pretensions, all will be well. Collier.

WELL. adv. [will, Gothick; pell, Saxon;
wel, Dutch; wel, Islandick.]

1. Not ill; not unhappily.

Some sense, and more estate, kind heav'n
To this well-lotted peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he's in play. Prior.

2. Not ill; not wickedly.

My bargains, and well-won thrift, he calls inter-rest. Shakspeare.

Thou one bad act with many deeds well done
Mayst cover. Milton.

3. Skilfully; properly; in a laudable manner.

Beware, and govern well thy appetite. Milton.
Whether the learn'd Minerva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream;
None can record their heavenly praise so well. Dry.

What poet would not mourn to see
His brother write as well as he? Swift.

4. Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.

Solyman commended them for a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Knolles.

The soldier that philosopher well-blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd.
Denham.

'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well. Dryden.

5. Not insufficiently; not defectively.

The plain of Jordan was well watered every where. Genesis.

We are well able to overcome it. Numbers.

The merchant adventurers, being a strong company, and well underfitted with rich men, held out bravely. Bacon.

6. To a degree that gives pleasure.

I like well, in some places, fair columns upon frames of carpenters work. Bacon.

7. With praise; favourably.

All the world speaks well of you. Pope.

8. Well is sometimes, like the French bien, a term of concession.

The knot might well be cut, but untied it could not be. Sidney.

9. Conveniently; suitably.

Know

In measure what the mind can well contain. Milton.

10. To a sufficient degree: a kind of slight fence.

A private caution I know not well how to fort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour. Wotton.

11. It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.

Well, let's away, and say how much is done.
Shakspeare.

Well, by this author's confession, a number superior are for the succession in the house of Hanover.
Swift.

12. As well as. Together with; not less than.

Long and tedious, as well as grievous and uneasy courses of physick, how necessary soever to the cure, much enfeeble the patient, and reduce him to a low and languishing state. Blackmore.

Coptos was the magazine of all the trade from Æthiopia, by the Nile, as well as of those commodities that came from the west by Alexandria.
Arbutnot.

13. Well enough. In a moderate degree; tolerably.

14. Well is him or me; bene est, he is happy.

Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue.
Ecclesiasticus.

15. Well nigh. Nearly; almost.

I freed well nigh half th' angelick name. Milton.

16. It is used much in composition, to ex- press any thing right, laudable, or not defective.

Antiochus understanding him not to be well-affected to his affairs, provided for his own safety.
2 Mac.

There may be safety to the well-affected Persians; but to those which do conspire against us, a memorial of destruction. Esther.

Should a whole host at once discharge the bow,
My well-aim'd shaft with death prevents the foe.
Pope.

What well-appointed leader fronts us here?
Shakspeare.

Well-apparell'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads. Shakspeare.

The pow'r of wisdom march'd before,
And ere the sacrificing throng he join'd, Admonish'd thus his well-attending mind. Pope.

Such musick
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung,
Whilst the Creator great

His constellations set,
And the well-balanc'd world on hinges hung.
Milton.

Learners must at first be believers, and their master's rules having been once made axioms to them, they mislead those who think it sufficient to excuse them, if they go out of their way in a well-beaten track. Locke.

He chose a thousand horse, the flow'r of all
His warlike troops, to wait the funeral:
To bear him back, and share Evander's grief;
A well-becoming, but a weak relief. Dryden.

Those opposed files,
Which lately met in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now in mutual well-beseeming rank
March all one way. Shakspeare.

O'er the Elean plains thy well-breath'd horse
Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryden.

More dismal than the loud dislodged roar
Of brazen enginery, that ceaseless storms
The bastion of a well-built city. Philips.

He conducted his course among the same well- chosen friendships and alliances with which he began it. Addison.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature
With his inducement. Shakspeare.

If good accrue, 'tis conferred most commonly on the base and infamous; and only happening sometimes to well-deservers. Dryden.

It grieves me he should desperately adventure the loss of his well-deserving life. Sidney.

What a pleasure is well-directed study in the search of truth! Locke.

A certain spark of honour, which rose in her well- disposed mind, made her fear to be alone with him, with whom alone she desired to be. Sidney.

The unprepossessed, the well-disposed, who both together make much the major part of the world, are affected with a due fear of these things. South.

A clear idea is that, whereof the mind hath such a full and evident perception, as it does receive from an outward object operating duly on a well- disposed organ. Locke.

Amid the main two mighty fleets engage;
Actium surveys the well-disputed prize. Dryden.

The ways of well-doing are in number even as many as are the kinds of voluntary actions: so that whatsoever we do in this world, and may do it ill, we shew ourselves therein by well-doing to be wise.
Hooker.

The conscience of well-doing may pass for a recompence. L'Estrange.

Beg God's grace, that the day of judgment may not overtake us unawares, but that by a patient well- doing we may wait for glory, honour, and immortality. Nelson.

God will judge every man according to his works;
to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing endure through the heat and burden of the day, he will give the reward of their labour. Rogers.

As far the spear I throw,
As flies an arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope.

Fair nymphs and well-dress'd youths around her shone, Pope.

But ev'ry eye was fix'd on her alone.
Such a doctrine in St. James's air Should chance to make the well-dress'd rabble stare. Pope.

The desire of esteem, riches, or power, makes men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion. Locke.

We ought to stand firm in well-established principles, and not be tempted to change for every disculty. Watts.

Echeneus sage, a venerable man!
Whose well-taught mind the present age surpass'd. Pope.

Some reliques of the true antiquity, though disguised, a well-eyed man may happily discover. Spenser.

How sweet the products of a peaceful reign!
The heaven-taught poet, and enchanting strain;
The well-fill'd palace, the perpetual feast;
A land rejoicing, and a people blest. Pope.

Turkish blood did his young hands imbue:
From thence returning with deserv'd applause,
Against the Moors his well-flesh'd sword he draws. Dryden.

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth. Wallen.

W E L

A rational soul can be no more discerned in a well-formed than ill-shaped infant. Locke.

A well-formed proposition is sufficient to communicate the knowledge of a subject. Watts.

Oh! that I'd died before the well-fought wall!
Had some distinguish'd day renown'd my fall,
All Greece had paid my solemn funerals. Pope.

Good men have a well-grounded hope in another life; and are as certain of a future recompence, as of the being of God. Atterbury.

Let firm, well-hammer'd soles protect thy feet
Through freezing snows. Gay.

The camp of the heathen was strong, and well-harnessed, and compassed round with horsemen. Mac.

Among the Romans, those who saved the life of a citizen, were dressed in an oaken garland; but among us, this has been a mark of such well-intentioned persons as would betray their country. Addison.

He, full of fraudulent arts,
This well-invented tale for truth imparts. Dryden.

He, by enquiry, got to the well-known house of Kalender. Sidney.

Soon as thy letters trembling I unclose,
That well-known name awakens all my woes. Pope.

Where proud Athens rears her tow'ry head,
With opening streets and shining structures spread,
She past, delighted with the well-known seats. Pope.

From a confin'd well-manag'd store
You both employ and feed the poor. Waller.

A noble soul is better pleased with a zealous vindicator of liberty, than with a temporizing poet, or well-mannered court slave, and one who is ever decent, because he is naturally servile. Dryden.

Well-meaners think no harm; but for the rest,
Things sacred they pervert, and silence is the best. Dryden.

By craft they may prevail on the weakness of some well-meaning men to engage in their designs. Rogers.

He examines that well-meant, but unfortunate, lye of the conquest of France. Arbutnot.

A critick supposes he has done his part, if he proves a writer to have failed in an expression; and can it be wondered at, if the poets seem resolved not to own themselves in any error? for as long as one side despises a well-meant endeavour, the other will not be satisfied with a moderate approbation. Pope.

Many sober, well-minded men, who were real lovers of the peace of the kingdom, were imposed upon. Clarendon.

Jarring int'rests of themselves create
Th' according musick of a well-mix'd state. Pope.

The well-tim'd oars
With sounding strokes divide the sparkling waves. Smith.

Wisdom's triumph is well-tim'd retreat,
As hard a science to the fair as great. Pope.

Mean time we thank you for your well-took labour;
Go to your rest. Shakspere.

Oh you are well-tun'd now; but I'll let down the pegs that make this musick. Shakspere.

Her well-turn'd neck he view'd,
And on her shoulders her dishevell'd hair. Dryden.

A well-weighed judicious poem, which at first gains no more upon the world than to be just received, insinuates itself by insensible degrees into the liking of the reader. Dryden.

He rails
On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift,
Which he calls interest. Shakspere.

Each by turns the other's bound invade,
As, in some well-wrought picture, light and shade. Pope.

*Well*aday. interject. [This is a corruption of welaway. See WELAWAY.] Alas.

O *wel*aday, mistress Ford, having an honest man to your husband, to give him some such cause of suspicion! Shakspere.

Ah, *wel*aday, I'm shent with baneful smart! Gay.

*Well*being. n. f. [well and be.] Happiness; prosperity.

Man is not to depend upon the uncertain dispositions of men for his *well*being, but only on God and his own spirit. Taylor.

For whose *well*being
So amply, and with hands so liberal,
Thou hast provided all things. Milton.

The most sacred ties of duty are founded upon gratitude: such as the duties of a child to his parent, and of a subject to his sovereign. From the former there is required love and honour, in recompence of being; and from the latter obedience and subjection, in recompence of protection and *well*being. South.

All things are subservient to the beauty, order, and *well*being of the whole. L'Estrange.

He who does not co-operate with his holy spirit, receives none of those advantages which are the perfecting of his nature, and necessary to his *well*being. Spektator.

*Well*born. adj. Not meanly descended.

*Well*fare. n. f. [well and fare.] Happiness; prosperity.

They will ask, what is the final cause of a king? and they will answer the people's *well*fare. Certainly a true answer; and as certainly an imperfect one. Holyday.

*Well*favoured. adj. [well and fa-vour.] Beautiful; pleasing to the eye.

His wife seems to be *well*favoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer. Shakspere.

*Well*met. interject. [well and meet.] A term of salutation.

Once more to-day *well*met, distemper'd lords;
The king by me requests your presence straight. Shakspere.

*Well*natur'd. adj. [well and nature.] Good-natured; kind.

On their life no grievous burden lies,
Who are *well*natur'd, temperate, and wise:
But an inhuman and ill-temper'd mind
Not any easy part in life can find. Denham.

The manners of the poets were not unlike; both of them were well-bred, *well*natur'd, amorous, and libertine, at least in their writings; it may be also in their lives. Dryden.

Still with esteem no less convers'd than read;
With wit *well*natur'd, and with books well-bred. Pope.

*Well*nigh. adv. [well and nigh.] Almost.

The same so fore annoy'd has the knight,

He must not float upon his wat'ry bier
Upweep'd, nor welter to the parching winds.
Milton.

The companions of his fall o'erwhelm'd
He soon discerns, and welt'ring by his side
The next himself.
Milton.
The gasping head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood.
Dryden.

He sung Darius, great and good,
By too severe a fate,
Fallen from his high estate,
And welt'ring in his blood.
Dryden.
Bellona wades in blood; that mangled body,
Deform'd with wounds and welt'ring in its gore,
I know it well! Oh close the dreadful scene!
Believe me, Phœbus, I have seen too much.
Murphy.

2. To roll voluntarily; to wallow.
If a man inglut himself with vanity, or welter in filthiness like a swine, all learning, all goodness, is soon forgotten.
Ascham.

WEMM. n. f. [pem, Saxon.] A spot; a scar.

Although the wound be healed, yet the wemme
or scar still remaineth.
Brerewood.

WEN. n. f. [pen, Saxon.] A fleshy or callous excrescence or protuberance.

Warts are said to be destroyed by the rubbing them with a green elder stick, and then burying the stick to rot in muck. It would be tried with corns and wens, and such other excrescences.
Bacon.

Mountains seem but so many wens and unnatural protuberances upon the face of the earth.
More.

The poet rejects all incidents which are foreign to his poem: they are wens and such other excrescences, which belong not to the body.
Dryden.

A promontory wen, with grievously grace,
Stood high upon the handle of his face.
Dryden.

WENCH. n. f. [pencle, Saxon.]

1. A young woman.
What do I, silly wench, know what love hath prepared for me?
Sidney.
Now—how dost thou look now? Oh ill-star'd wench!

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt,
This look of thine will hurl my soul from heav'n,
And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl,
Ev'n like thy chastity.
Shakspeare.

Thou wouldst persuade her to a worse offence
Than that whereof thou didst accuse her wench.
Donne.

2. A young woman in contempt; a strumpet.

But the rude wench her answer'd nought at all.
Spenser.

Do not pray in wench-like words with that Which is so serious.

colloquial word.

2. To give a box on the ear. Ainsworth.

WHE'RRY. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.]

A light boat used on rivers.

And falling down into a lake,

Which him up to the neck doth take,

His fury somewhat it doth slake,

He calleth for a ferry;

What was his club he made his boat,

And in his oaken cup doth float

As safe as in a wherry. Drayton.

Let the vessel split on shelves,

With the freight enrich themselves:

Safe within my little wherry,

All their madness makes me merry. Swift.

O whet not on these too, too furious peers;

For blessed are the peace-makers! Shakspeare.

Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar,

I have not slept. Shakspeare.

I will whet on the king. Shakspeare.

He favoured the christian merchants; and, the more to whet him forwards, the bassia had cumningly insinuated into his acquaintance one Mo-learabe. Knut.

Let not thy deep bitterness beget

Careless despair in me; for that will whet

My mind to scorn. Dante.

The cause why onions, salt, and pepper, in baked meats, move appetite, is by vellication of those nerves; for motion whetted. Bacon.

A disposition in the king began to be discovered, which, nourished and whetted on by bad counsellors, proved the blot of his times; which was the crushing treasure out of his subjects purses by penal laws. Bacon.

'Tis sad that we should sacrifice the church's peace to the whetting and inflaming of a little vain curiosity. Decay of Party.

Great contemporaries whet and cultivate each other. Dryden.

Himself invented first the shining share,

And whetted human industry by care;

Nor suffer'd sloth to trust his active reign. Dryden.

WHET. n. f. [from the verb.]

In destruction by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant.

To which their want of judging abilities, add also their want of opportunity to apply to such consideration as may let them into the true goodness and evil of things, which are qualities which seldom display themselves to the first view.

The queen of furies by their side is set,
And snatches from their mouths th' untasted meat,
Which if they touch, her kissing snakes she rears.

After the several earths, consider the parts of the surface of this globe which are barren, as sand and rocks.

2. It had formerly sometimes the before it.

Do they not blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called?

3. It formerly was used for who, and related likewise to persons: as in the first words of the Lord's Prayer.

The Almighty, which giveth wisdom to whomsoever it pleaseth him, did, for the good of his church, stay those eager affections.

Do you hear, fir, of a battle? —
—Every one hears that,
Which can distinguish sound.

Had I been there, which am a silly woman,
The soldiers should have tofs'd me on their pikes
Before I would have granted to that act.

4. The genitive of which, as well as of who, is whose; but whose, as derived from which, is scarcely used but in poetry.

Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste.

5. It is sometimes a demonstrative: as, take which you will.

What is the night? —
—Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

6. It is sometimes an interrogative: as, which is the man?

Which of you convinceth me of sin?
For which of these works do ye stone me?

Two fair twins,
The puzzled strangers which is which enquire.

WHICHSOEVER. pron. [which and soever.]

Whether one or the other.
Whichsoever of these he takes, and how often soever he doubles it, he finds that he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition at first setting out.

WHIFF. n. s. [chwyth, Welsh.] A blast; a puff of wind.

Pyrrhus at Priam drives, in rage strikes wide;
But with the whiff and wind of his fell sword
Th' unnerved father falls.

If some unfav'ry whiff betray the crime,
Invent a quarrel straight.

Three pipes after dinner he constantly smokes,
And seasons his wbiffs with impertinent jokes.

Nick pulked out a boatswain's whistle: upon the first wbiff the tradesmen came jumping in.

To WHIFFLE. v. n. [from wbiff.] To move inconstantly, as if driven by a puff of wind.

Nothing is more familiar, than for a wbiffing fop, that has not one grain of the sense of a man of honour, to play the hero.

Was our reason given to be thus puff'd about,
Like a dry leaf, an idle straw, a feather,
The sport of ev'ry wbiffing blast that blows?

A person of a wbiffing and unsteady turn of mind cannot keep close to a point of controversy, but wanders from it perpetually.

WHIFFLER. n. s. [from wbiffle.]

1. A harbinger; probably one with a horn or trumpet.

The beach
Pales in the flood with men, with wives and boys,
Whose shouts and claps ou voice the deep-mouth'd sea,
Which, like a mighty wbiffer 'fore the king,
Seems to prepare his way.

2. One of no consequence; one moved with a whiff or puff.

Our fine young ladies retain in their service a great number of supernumerary and insignificant fellows, which they use like wbiffers, and commonly call shoeing-horns.

Every wbiffler in a laced coat, who frequents the chocolate-house, shall talk of the constitution.

WHIG. n. s. [hpæɣ, Saxon.]

1. Whey.
2. The name of a faction.

The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them through the year; and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north; and from a word, whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamors, and shorter the wbigs. Now in that year, before the news came down of duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching at the head of their parishes with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The marquis of Argyle and his party came and headed them, they being about six thousand. This was called the whiggamors inroad; and, ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called wbigs; and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of disunion.

Whoever has a true value for church and state, should avoid the extremes of wbig for the sake of the former, and the extremes of tory on the account of the latter.

WHIGGISH. adj. [from wbig.] Relating to the whigs.

She 'll prove herself a tory plain,
From principles the whigs maintain;
And, to defend the wbiggish cause,
Her topicks from the tories draws.

WHIGGISM. n. s. [from wbig.] The notions of a whig.

I could quote passages from fifty pamphlets, wholly made up of wbiggism and atheism.

WHILE. n. s. [weil, Germ. hpile, Sax.]

Time; space of time;
If my beauty be any thing, then let it obtain this much of you, that you will remain some while in this company, to ease your own travel and our solitariness.

I have seen her rise from her bed, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

One while we thought him innocent,
And then w' accus'd the consul.

We saw him feeding come,
And on his necke a burthen lugging home,

Most highly huge, of fere-wood; which the pile
That fed his fire supplide all supper while. Chapman.

I hope all ingenuous persons will advertise me fairly, if they think it worth their while, of what they dislike in it. Digby.

Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd Milton.

How couldst thou look for other, but that God should condemn thee for the doing of things for which thine own conscience did condemn thee all the while thou wast doing of them? Tillotson.

That which I have all this while been endeavouring to convince men to, is no other but what God himself doth particularly recommend. Tillotson.

Few, without the hope of another life, would think it worth their while to live above the allurements of sense. Atterbury.

What fate has dispos'd of the papers, 'tis not worth while to tell. Locke.

WHILE. } adv. [hpile, Saxon. Whiles
WHILES } is now out of use.]
WHILST. }

1. During the time that.

Whiles I was protector,
Pity was all the fault that was in me. Shakspeare.

What we have, we prize not to the worth
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lackt and lost,
Why then we rack the value. Shakspeare.

Repeated, while the sedentary earth
Attains her end. Milton.

2. As long as.

Use your memory; you will sensibly experience a gradual improvement, while you take care not to overload it. Watts.

3. At the same time that.

Whiles by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God, for your professed subjection unto the gospel. 2 Corinthians.

Can he imagine that God sends forth an irresistible strength against some sins, whilst in others he permits men a power of repelling his grace?
Decay of Piety.

All hearts shall bend, and ev'ry voice
In loud applauding shouts rejoice;
While all his gracious aspect praise,
And crowds grow loyal as they gaze. Addison.

He sits attentive to his own applause;
While wits and templars ev'ry sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise. Pope.

To WHILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To loiter.

Men guilty this way never have observed that the whiling time, the gathering together, and waiting a little before dinner, is the most awkwardly pass'd away of any. Spektator.

WHILE'RE. adv. [while and ere, or be- fore] A little while ago; ere while.
Not in use.

That cursed wight from whom I 'scap'd whilere,
A man of hell, that calls himself Despair. Spenser.
Let us be jocund: will you troul the catch
You taught me but whilere-ere? Shakspeare.

Those armies, that whilere-ere Affrighted all the world, by him struck dead with fear. Drayton.

Here lies Hobbinol, our shepherd whilere.
Raleigh.

He who, with all heaven's heraldry, whilere
Enter'd the world, now bleeds to give us ease.
Milton.

WHI'LOM. adv. [hphilom, Saxon, that is, once on a time.] Formerly; once; of old. Not in use.

Where now the studious lawyers have their bowers,

There whilom wont the Templar nights abide,
Till they decayed through pride. Spenser.

In northern clime a val'rous knight
Did whilom kill his bear in fight,
And wound a fiddler. Hudibras.

Yet art thou not inglorious in thy fate;
For so Apollo, with unweeting hand,
Whilom did slay his dearly loved mate. Milton.

WHIM. n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from a thing turning round; nor can I find any etymology more probable.] A freak; an odd fancy; a caprice; an irregular motion of desire.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate. Swift.

He learnt his whims and high-flown notions too,
Such as fine men adopt, and fine men rue. Harte.

To WHIMPER. v. n. [wimmeren, German.] To cry without any loud noise.

The father by his authority should always stop this sort of crying, and silence their whimpering.
Locke.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering she shall make him amble on a gossip's message. Rowe.

In peals of thunder now she roars, and now
she gently whimpers like a lowing cow. Swift.

WHIMPLED. adj. [I suppose from whimper.] This word seems to mean distorted with crying.

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,

This signior Junio's giant dwarf, Dan Cupid,
Regent of love-rhimes, lord of folded arms,
Th' annointed sovereign of sighs and groans.
Shakspeare.

WHIMSEY. n. s. [only another form of the word whim.] A freak; a caprice; an odd fancy; a whim.

At this rate a pretended freak or whimsy may be palliated. L'Estrange.

All the ridiculous and extravagant shapes that can be imagined, all the fancies and whimsies of poets and painters, and Egyptian idolaters, if so be they are consistent with life and propagation, would be now actually in being if our atheists notion were true. Ray.

So now, as health or temper changes,
In larger compass Alma ranges;
This day below, the next above,
As light or solid whimsies move. Prior.

What I speak, my fair Chloe, and what I write, shows

The difference there is betwixt nature and art;
I court others in verse, but I love thee in prose;
And they have my whimsies, but thou hast my heart. Prior.

Oranges in whimsy-boards went round. King.

He spoke with such a sedate and undisturbed mind, that I could not impute it to melancholy, or a splenetick whimsy. Blackmore.

Th' extravagance of poetry
Is at a loss for figures to express
Men's folly, whimsies, and inconstancy. Swift.

WHIMSICAL. adj. [from whimsy.] Freakish; capricious; oddly fanciful.

In another circumstance I am particular, or, as my neighbours call me, whimsical: as my garden invites into it all the birds, I do not suffer any one to destroy their nests. Addison.

WHIN. n. s. [chwyn, Welsh; genista spi-
nosa, Latin.] Forze; gorse.

With whins or with furzes thy hovel renew.
Tusser.

Plants that have prickles in their leaf are holly, juniper, whin-bush, and thistle. Bacon.

To WHINE. v. n. [panian, Saxon; wee- nen, Dutch; cwyno, Welsh.] To lament in low murmurs; to make a plaintive noise; to moan meanly and effeminately.

They came to the wood, where the hounds were in couples staying their coming, but with a whining accent craving liberty. Sidney.

At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakspeare.

Twice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shaksp.

Whip him,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Shakspeare.

The common people have a whining tone and accent in their speech, as if they did still suffer some oppression. Davies.

Then if we whine, look pale,
And tell our tale,

Men are in pain
For us again;
So neither speaking doth become
The lover's state, nor being dumb. Suckling.

He made a viler noise than swine
In windy weather, when they whine. Hudibras.

Some, under sheep's cloathing, had the properties of wolves; that is, they could whine and howl, as well as bite and devour. South.

I was not born so base to flatter crowds,
And move your pity by a whining tale. Dryden.

Laughing at their whining may perhaps be the proper method. Locke.

Life was given for noble purposes; and therefore it must not be sacrificed to a quarrel, nor whined away in love. Collier.

Upon a general mourning, mercers and woollendrapers would in four-and-twenty hours raise their cloths and silks to above a double price; and, if the mourning continued long, come whining with petitions to the court, that they were read to starve.
Swift.

WHINE. n. s. [from the verb.] Plaintive noise; mean or affected complaint.

The favourable opinion of men comes oftentimes by a few demure looks and affected whines, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces.
South.

Thy hateful wine of woe
Breaks in upon my sorrows, and distracts
My jarring senses with thy beggar's cry. Rowe.

To WHINNY. v. n. [hinnio, Latin; from the sound.] To make a noise like a horse or colt.

WHINYARD. n. s. [pinnan and ape, to gain honour, Saxon. Skinner. I know not whether this word was ever used seriously, and therefore perhaps it might be denominated in contempt from whin, a tool to cut whins.] A sword: in contempt.

He snatch'd his whinyard up, that fled
When he was falling off his steed. Hudibras.

To WHIP. v. a. [hpeopan, Saxon; wip- pen, Dutch.]

1. To strike with any thing tough and flexible.

He took
The harness'd steeds, that still with horror shook,
And plies them with the lash, and whips 'em on;
And, as he whips, upbraids 'em with his son. Addison.

2. To sew slightly.

In half-whipt muslin needles useless lie. Gay.

3. To drive with lashes.

This unbeard fauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shakspeare.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again:
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shakspeare.

Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what it was to be beaten till lately.
Shakspeare.

If ordered every day to whip his top so long as to make him weary, he will wish for his book, if you promise it him as a reward of having whipt his top lustily quite out. Locke.

Whipt cream; unfortified with wine or ale!
Froth'd by that flatterer muse, Indifference. Harte.

4. To correct with lashes.

I'll leave you to the hearing of the cause,
Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.
Shakspeare.

Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Left you should chance to whip your information.
Shakspeare.

Hourly we see some raw pin-feather'd thing
Attempt to mount, and fights and heroes sing,
Who for false quantities was whipt at school
But t'other day, and breaking grammar-rule. Dryd.

How did he return this haughty brave,
Who whipt the winds, and made the sea his slave?
Dryden.

This requires more than setting children a task, and whipping them, without any more ado, if it be not done to our fancy. Locke.

Oh chain me! whip me! let me be the scorn Of sordid rabbles and insulting crowds! Give me but life. Smith.

Heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and are not able to bear the pain and indignity of whipping. Swift.

With hoary whiskers and a forked beard. Pope.
A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison.

To WHISPER. v. n. [whisperen, Dutch.]
To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker; to speak with suspicion or timorous caution.

He sometime with fearful countenance would desire the king to look to himself; for that all the court and city were full of whisperings, and expectation of some sudden change. Sidney.
All that hate me whisper together against me. Psalms.

In speech of man, the whispering or sulurrus, whether louder or softer is an interior sound; but the speaking out is an exterior sound; and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing, in whispering, but in speech you may. Bacon.

The king Acastus calls;
Then softly whisper'd in her faithful ear,
And bade his daughters at the rites appear. Pope.

It is as offensive to speak wit in a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it: he is displeased at both, because he is ignorant of what is said. Pope.

The hollow whisp'ring breeze, the pliant rills
Purle down amid the twisted roots. Thomson.

To WHISPER. v. a.

1. To address in a low voice.

When they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear. Shakspeare.
Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak
Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break. Shakspeare.

He first whispers the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a card. Bacon.

The steward whispered the young Templar, that's true to my knowledge. Tatler.

2. To utter in a low voice.

You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whispered ones; for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments. Shakspeare.

Sit and eat your bread,
Nor whisper more a word; or get ye gone,
And weep without doors. Chapman.

They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitly withdrawing from the apostles, noise it about the city. Bentley.

3. To prompt secretly.

Charles the emperor,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
For 't was indeed his colour, but he came
To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation. Shakspeare.

WHISPER. n. s. [from the verb.] A low soft voice; cautious and timorous speech.

The extension is more in tones than in speech;
therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.

Strictly observe the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will keep conscience quick and vigilant. South.

Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryden.

He uncall'd, his patron to controul,
Divulg'd the secret whispers of his soul. Dryden.

With such like false whispers, in former reigns,
the ears of princes have been poisoned. Davenant.

WHISPERER. n. s. [from whisper.]

1. One that speaks low.

2. A private talker; a teller of secrets; a conveyer of intelligence.

Kings trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers than good magistrates. Bacon.

WHIST. [This word is called by Skinner, who seldom errs, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used; but Shakspeare uses it as a verb, and Milton as an adjective or a par-ticipple.]

1. Are silent.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Curt'sied when you have, and kist,
The wild waves whist. Shakspeare.

2. Still; silent; put to silence.

The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd,
Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton.

3. Be still.

WHIST. n. s. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence: vulgarly pronounced whisk.

The clergyman used to play at whist and swobbers. Swift.

Walks his grave round, beneath a cloud of smoke
Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe. Thomson.

To WHISTLE. v. n. [hpietlan, Saxon; fistulo, Latin.]

1. To form a kind of musical sound by an inarticulate modulation of the breath.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle. Shakspeare.

Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike so sharp as you can scarce endure it. Bacon.

While the plowman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.

Should Bertran sound his trumpets,
And Torrifmond but whistle through his fingers,
He draws his army off. Dryden.

He whistled as he went for want of thought. Dryden.

The ploughman leaves the task of day,
And trudging homeward whistles on the way. Gay.

2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.

3. To sound shrill.

His big manly voice
Changing again toward childish treble pipes,
He whistles in his sound. Shakspeare.

Soft whiffers run along the leafy woods,
And mountains whistle to the murmur'ing floods. Dryden.

Rhætus from the hearth a burning brand
Selects, and whirling wayes; till from his hand
The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the right
On fair Charaxus' temples, near the sight
Then whistling past came on. Dryden.

When winged deaths in whistling arrows fly,
Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day? Prior.

The wild winds whistle, and the billows roar,
The splitting raft the furious tempest tore. Pope.

To WHISTLE. v. a. To call by a whistle.

Let him whistle them backwards and forwards,
till he is weary. South.

He chanced to miss his dog: we stood still till he had whistled him up. Addison.

When simple pride for flatt'ry makes demands,
May dunce by dunce be whistled off my hands! Pope.

WHISTLE. n. s. [hpietle, Saxon.]

1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.

My fire in caves constrains the wind,
Can with a breath their clam'rous rage appease;
They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas. Dryden.

2. A sound made by a small wind instrument.

3. The mouth; the organ of whistling.

Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts. Walton.

4. A small wind instrument.

The masters and pilots were so astonished, that they knew not how to direct; and if they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistle. Sidney.

Behold
Upon the hempen tackle shipboys climbing;
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus'd. Shakspeare.

Small whistles, or shepherds oaten pipes, give a sound because of their extreme slenderness, where by the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she ginged, and the whistle blew. Pope.

5. The noise of winds.

6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.

Madam, here comes my lord.—
—I have been worth the whistle. Shakspeare.

The knight, pursuing this epistle,
Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle. Hudibras.

WHISTLER. n. s. [from whistle.] One who whistles.

The prize was a guinea, to be conferred upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearest, and go through his tune without laughing. Addison.

WHIT. n. s. [piht, a thing; apiht, any thing, Saxon.] A point; a jot.

We love, and are no whit regarded. Sidney.

Her sacred book with blood ywrit,
That none could read except she did him teach,
She unto him disclosed every whit,
And heavenly documents thereout did preach. Spenser.

The motive cause of doing it is not in ourselves, but carrieth us as if the wind should drive a feather in the air; we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven. Hooker.

Although the lord became the king's tenant, his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism. Davies.

Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous, even proportion,
And she no whit encumber'd with her store. Milton.

It does not me a whit displease,
That the rich all honours seize. Cowley.

In accounts of ancient times, it ought to satisfy any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit near one another. Tillotson.

It is every whit as honourable to assist a good minister, as to oppose a bad one. Addison.

WHITE. adj. [hpit, Saxon; wit, Dutch.]

1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours; snowy.

When the paper was held nearer to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approached nearest; but when it was equally, or almost equally, distant from all the colours, so that it might be equally illuminated by them all, it appeared white. Newton.

Why round our coaches crowd the white glow'd beaus? Pope.

2. Having the colour of fear; pale.

My hands are of your colour, but I shame
To wear a heart so white. Shakspeare.

3. Having the colour appropriated to happiness and innocence.

Welcome, pure-eyed faith, white-handed hope;
Thou hovering angel girl with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity. Milton.

Wert thou that sweet-smiling youth?
Or that crown'd matron sage, white-robed Truth? Milton.

Let this auspicious morning be express'd
With a white stone distinguish'd from the rest,
White as thy fame, and as thy honour clear;
And let new joys attend on thy new-added year. Dryden.

To feastsful mirth be this white hour assign'd,
And sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Pope.

Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,
And white-rob'd innocence from heav'n descend. Pope.

4. Gray with age.

I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
You high-engender'd battles 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakspeare.

So minutes, hours, and days, weeks, months, and years,
Past over, to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Shakspeare.

5. Pure; unblemished.

Unhappy Dryden! in all Charles's days,
Roscommon only boasts unspotted lays:
And in our own, excuse some courtly stains,
No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.

WHITE. n. f.

1. Whiteness; any thing white; white colour.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the faries,
Finely attired in a robe of white. Shakspeare.

A friend coming to visit me, I stopped him at the door, and before I told him what the colours were, or what I was doing, I asked him which of the two whites were the best, and wherein they differed? and after he had at that distance viewed them well, he answered, that they were both good whites, and that he could not say which was best, nor wherein their colours differed. Newton.

2. The mark at which an arrow is shot, which used to be painted white.

If a mark be set up for an archer at a great distance, let him aim as exactly as he can, the least wind shall take his arrow, and divert it from the white. Dryden.

Remove him, then, and all your plots fly lure,
Point blank, and level to the very white
Of your designs. Southern.

3. The albuginous part of an egg.

I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs
T' apply to 's bleeding face. Shakspeare.

The strongest repellents are the whites of new-laid eggs beaten to a froth with alum. Wiseman.

When fates among the stars do grow,
Thou into the close nests of time dost peep;
And there, with piercing eye,
Through the firm shell and the thick white dost spy

Years to come a-forming lie,
Close in their sacred fecundine asleep. Cowley.

What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to fashion a chick? Boyle.

The two in most regions represent the yolk and the membrane that lies next above it; so the exterior region of the earth is as the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Burnet.

4. The white part of the eye.

Our general himself
Sanctifies himself with 's hands,
And turns up th' white o' th' eye to his discourse. Shakspeare.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up, as a hillock, above its convexity. Ray.

To WHITE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

To make white; to dealbate; to white-wash.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them. Mark.

Like unto whited sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones. Matthew.

WHITELEAD. n. f.

White lead is made by taking sheet-lead, and having cut it into long and narrow slips, they make it up into rolls, but so that a small distance may remain between every spiral revolution. These rolls are put into earthen pots, so ordered that the lead may not sink down above half way, or some small matter more, in them: these pots have each of them very sharp vinegar in the bottom, so full as almost to touch the lead. When the vinegar and lead have both been put into the pot, it is covered up close, and so left for a certain time; in which space the corrosive tumours of the vinegar will reduce the surface of the lead into a mere white calx, which they separate by knocking it with a hammer. There are two sorts of this sold at the colour shops; the one called ceruse, which is the most pure part, and the other is called white lead. Quincy.

WHITELIVERED. adj. [from white and liver.] Envious; malicious; cowardly.

WHITELY. adj. [from white.] Coming near to white.

A whitely wanton, with a velvet brow,
With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes. Shakspeare.

Now, governor, I see that I must blush
Quite through this veil of night a whitely shame,
To think I could design to make those free
Who were by nature slaves. Southern.

WHITEMEAT. n. f. [white and meat.]

Food made of milk.

Much saltiness in whitemeat is ill for the stone. Tuffer.

The Irish banished into the mountains, lived only upon whitemeats. Spenser.

To WHITEN. v. a. [from white.] To make white.

The smoke of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanies. Brown.

Flax the soil and climate are proper for whiten- ing, by the frequency of brooks, and also of winds. Temple.

Women of my complexion ought to be more modest, especially since our faces debar us from all artificial whitenings. Guardian.

Striking her cliff, the storm confirms her pow'r;
The waves but whiten her triumphant shore. Prior.

Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skewer to write;
In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the mint,
Like Lee or Budgell, I will rhyme and print. Pope.

To WHITEN. v. n. To grow white.

The bark expects its freight;
The loosen'd canvas trembles with the wind,
And the sea whitens with auspicious gales. Smith.

WHITENER. n. f. [from whiten.] One who makes any thing white.

WHITENESS. n. f. [from white.]

1. The state of being white; freedom from colour.

This doth lead me to her hand,
Of my first love the fatal band,
Where whiteness doth for ever sit;
Nature herself enamell'd it. Sidney.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having disposed itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton.

2. Paleness.

Thou tremblest, and the whiteness of thy cheek
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand. Shakspeare.

3. Purity; cleanness.

The least spot is visible on ermine: but to preserve this whiteness in its original purity, you have, like that ermine, forsaken the common track of business, which is not always clean. Dryden.

WHITEPOT. n. f. A kind of food.

Cornwall squab-pye, and Devon whitepot brings. King.

I know him, he'll but whizz, and straight go out.
Dryden.

Soon all with vigour bend their trusty bows,
And from the quiver each his arrow chose:
Hippocoon's was the first; with forceful sway
It flew, and whizzing cut the liquid way. Dryden.

WHO. pronoun. genitive whose; other cases whom. [hpa, Saxon; wie, Dutch.]

1. A pronoun relative, applied to persons.

We have no perfect description of it, nor any knowledge how, or by whom, it is inhabited. Abbot.

Of have I seen a timely-parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the lab'ring heart,
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy. Shakspeare.

Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present,
Whom I may rather challenge for unkindness,
Than pity for mischance. Shakspeare.

The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court. Shakspeare.

2. Which of many.

There thou tell'st of kings, and who aspire;
Who fall, who rise, who triumph, who do moan.
Daniel.

Tell who loves who; what favours some partake,
And who is jilted. Dryden.

6. It is used often interrogatively; as, who is this? meaning, what is the character or name of this person? Who shall do this? that is, where shall any be found that can do this?

In the grave who shall give thee thanks? Psalms.
Who is like unto the Lord? Psalms.

Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Job.

Who first seduc'd them to that dire revolt?
The infernal serpent. Milton.

Who feeds that alms-house neat, but void of state,
Where age and want sit smiling at the gate?

Who taught that heav'n-directed spire to rise?
The man of Rofs, each lisping babe replies. Pope.

WHOEVER. pronoun. [who and ever.] Any one, without limitation or exception.

Whoever doth to temperance apply
His stedfast life, and all his actions frame,
Trust me, shall find no greater enemy,
Than stubborn perturbation to the same. Spenser.

I think myself beholden, whoever shews me my mistakes. Locke.

Whoever thou art, that fortune brings to keep
The rights of Neptune, monarch of the deep;

Thee first it fits, O stranger, to prepare
The due libation, and the solemn prayer. Pope.

Whoever is really brave, has always this comfort when he is oppressed, that he knows himself to be superior to those who injure him, by forgiving it. Pope.

WHOLE. adj. [palg, Saxon; heel, Dutch.]

virtue.

They suffer us to famish, repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes to chain up the poor. Shakspeare.

'Tis no less
To govern justly, make your empire flourish,
With wholesome laws, in riches, peace, and plenty;

Than, by the expence of wealth and blood, to make New acquisitions. Denham.

5. Kindly; pleasing. A burlesque use.

I cannot make you a wholesome answer; my wit's diseased. Shakspeare.

To wail friends lost,
Is not by much so wholesome, profitable,
As to rejoice at friends but newly found. Shakspeare.

WHO'LESOMELY. adv. [from wholesome.]
Salubriously; salutiferously.

WHO'LESOMENESS. n. f. [from wholesome.]

dictates of an higher choice, that he really thought no meat pleasant, but in proportion to its wholesomeness. Fell.

We made a standard of the healthfulness of the air from the proportion of acute and epidemical diseases, and of the wholesomeness of the food from that of the chronical. Grant.

At Tonon they shewed us a great fountain of water, that is in great esteem for its wholesomeness; weighing two ounces in a pound less than the same measure of the lake water. Addison.

Little foresaw he that th' Almighty pow'r,
Who feeds the faithful at his chosen hour,
Consults not taste, but wholesomeness of food,
Nor means to please their sense, but do them good. Hume.

2. Salutariness; conduciveness to good.

WHO'LLY. adv. [from whole.]

1. Completely; perfectly.

The thrust was so strong, that he could not so wholly beat it away; but that it met with his thigh, through which it ran. Sidney.

Thus equal deaths are dealt with equal chance;
By turns they quit their ground, by turns advance:
Victors and vanquish'd in the various field,
Nor wholly overcome, nor wholly yield. Dryden.

This story was written before Boccace; but its author being wholly lost, Chaucer is now become an original. Dryden.

2. Totally; in all the parts or kinds.

Metals are wholly subterranean. Bacon.
Nor wholly lost we so deserv'd a prey;
For storms repenting part of it restor'd. Dryden.

They employed themselves wholly in domestic life; and, provided a woman could keep her house in order, she never troubled herself about regulating the commonwealth. Addison.

W H O

WHOM. The accusative of who, singular and plural.

As God is originally holy in himself, so he might communicate his sanctity to the sons of men, whom he intended to bring into the fruition of himself.

The widow'd idle in mourning
Dries up her tears. Dryden.

Inclement weather and frosty blasts deface
The blithesome year, trees of their shrivell'd fruits
Are widow'd, dreary storms o'er all prevail. Philips.

WIDOWER. n. f. [from widow.] One who has lost his wife.

The king, sealing up all thoughts of love under the image of her memory, remained a widower many years after. Sidney.

The main consents are had, and here we'll stay
To see our widower's second marriage day. Shakespeare.

They that marry, as they that shall get no children; and they that marry not, as the widowers. 2 Esdras.

WIDOWHOOD. n. f. [from widow.]

1. The state of a widow.

Cecropia, having in her widowhood taken this young Arctesia into her charge, had taught her to think that there is no wisdom but in including both heaven and earth in one's self. Sidney.

Ne ween my right with strength adown to tread,
Through weakness of my widowhood or woe,
For truth is strong. Spenser.

She employed her last widowhood to works no less bountiful than charitable. Carw.

It is of greater merit wholly to abstain from things desirable, than after fruition to be content to leave them; as they who magnify single life prefer virginity much before widowhood. Watson.

Cherish thy hasten'd widowhood with the gold
Of matrimonial treason; so farewell. Milton.

W I F

2. Estate settled on a widow. Not in use.

For that dow'ry, I'll assure her of Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,
In all my lands. Shakspeare.

WIDOWHUNTER. n. f. [widow and hunter.] One who courts widows for a jointure.

The widowhunters about town often afford them great diversion. Addison.

WIDOWMAKER. n. f. [widow and maker.] One who deprives women of their husbands.

It grieves my soul
That I must draw this metal from my side
To be a widowmaker. Shakspeare.

WIDOW-WAIL. n. f. [widow and wail.] A plant.

WIDTH. n. f. [from wide.] Breadth; wideness. A low word.

For the width of the mortels gage this side, then for the tenant gage on that end of the quarter you intend the tenant shall be made. Moxon.

Let thy vines in intervals be set;
Indulge their width, and add a roomy space,
That their extreme lines may scarce embrace. Dryden.

To WIELD. v. a. [pealban, Saxon, to manage in the hand.]

1. To use with full command, as a thing not too heavy for the holder.

His looks are full of peaceful majesty,
His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
His hand to wield a scepter, and himself
Likely in time to bless a regal throne. Shakspeare.
'Mongst forests, hills, and floods, was ne'er such heave and shove,
Since Albion wielded arms against the son of Jove. Drayton.

There is that hand bolden'd to blood and war,
That must the sword in wond'rous actions wield. Daniel.

They are in the dark before they are aware, and then they make at nose only with terms; which, like too heavy weapons that they cannot wield, carry their strokes beyond their aim. Digby.

The least of whom could wield
These elements, and arm him with the force
Of all their regions. Milton.

Part wield their arms, part curb the foaming steed. Milton.

If Rome's great senate could not wield that sword,
Which of the conquer'd world had made them
lord;

What hope had ours, while yet their pow'r was new,

To rule victorious armies, but by you? Waller.

He worthiest, after him, his sword to wield,
Or wear his armour, or sustain his shield. Dryden.

2. To handle: in an ironical sense.

Bafe Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield?
Shakspeare.

WIE'LDY. adj. [from wield.] Manage-able.

WI'ERY. adj. [from wire.]

1. Made of wire: it were better written wiry.

Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals,
As when through flow'ry meads th' hill's shadow steals;

Off with that wiry coronet, and shew
The hairy diadem which on your head doth grow. Donne.

2. Drawn into wire.

Polymnia shall be drawn with her hair hanging loose about her shoulders, resembling wiry gold. Peacbam.

3. [from pan, a pool.] Wet; wearish; moist. Obsolete.

Where but by chance a silver drop hath fall'n,
Ev'n to that drop ten thousand wiry friends
Do glew themselves in sociable grief. Shakspeare.

WIFE. n. f. plural wives. [pip, Sax. wiff, Dutch.]

1. A woman that has a husband.

W I L

There's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakspeare.

The kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the East Indies for their mistress only, in whose favours they could patiently enough endure a rival; but esteemed America as their wife, in whose love they could not brook a competitor without foul dishonour. Heylin.

The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.
The wife her husband murders, he the wife. Dryden.

Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife. Pope.

2. It is used for a woman of low employment.

Strawberry wives lay two or three great strawberries at the mouth of their pot, and all the rest are little ones. Bacon.

WIG. n. f. Wig, being a termination in the names of men, signifies war, or else a hero; from pig, a word of that signification. Gibson.

WIG. n. f. [contracted from periwig.]

1. False hair worn on the head.

Triumphing tories and desponding whigs Forget their feuds, and join to save their wigs. Swift.

2. A sort of cake.

WIGHT. n. f. [piht, Saxon.] A person;
a being. Now used only in irony or contempt.

Beshrew the witch! with venomous wight she stays,
Tedious as hell; but flies the grasps of love,
With wings more momentary swift than thought. Shakspeare.

This world below did need one wight,
Which might thereof distinguish ev'ry part. Daniel.

This meaner wights, of trust and credit bare,
Not so respected, could not look t' effect. Daniel.

A wight he was, whose very sight would Entitle him mirror of knighthood. Hudibras.

The water flies all taste of living wight. Milton.

How couldst thou suffer thy devoted knight,
On thy own day, to fall by foe oppress'd,
The wight of all the world who lov'd thee best? Dryden.

His station he yielded up to a wight as disagreeable as himself. Addison.

In fame's full bloom lies Florio down at night,
And wakes next day a most inglorious wight;
The tulip's dead. Young.

WIGHT. adj. Swift; nimble. Out of use.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched. Spenser.

WIGHT, an initial in the names of men, signifies strong; nimble; lusty; being purely Saxon. Gibson.

WIGHTLY. adv. [from wight.] Swiftly;
nimble. Obsolete.

Her was her, while it was day-light,
But now her is a most wretched wight;
For day that was is wightly past,
And now at last the night doth hast. Spenser.

WILD. adj. [pihb, Saxon; wild, Dutch.]

1. Not tame; not domestick.

For I am he, and born to tame you, Kate,
And bring you from a wild cat to a kate,
Conformable as other household kates. Shakspeare.

Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way. Shakspeare.

All beasts of the earth since wild. Milton.

2. Propagated by nature; not cultivated.

Whatsoever will make a wild tree a garden tree, will make a garden tree to have less core or stone. Bacon.

Goose grafs or wild tansy is a weed that strong clays are very subject to. Mortimer.

The wild bee breeds in the stocks of old willows, in which they first bore a canal, and furnish afterwards with hangings, made of rose leaves: and, to finish their work, divide the whole into several rooms or nests. Grew.

W I L

3. Desert; uninhabited.

The wild beast where he wons in forest wild. Milton.

4. Savage; uncivilized: used of persons, or practices.

Affairs that walk,
As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakspeare.

Though the inundation destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

When they might not converse with any civil men without peril of their lives, whither should they fly but into the woods and mountains, and there live in a wild and barbarous manner. Davies.

May those already curst Essexian plains,
Where hasty death and pining sickness reigns,
Prove as a desert, and none there make stay
But savage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.

5. Turbulent; tempestuous; irregular.

His passions and his virtues lie confus'd,
And mixt together in so wild a tumult,
That the whole man is quite disfigur'd in him. Addison.

6. Licentious; ungoverned.

The barbarous dissonance
Of that wild rout that tore the Thracian bard. Milton.

Valour grown wild by pride, and pow'r by rage,
Did the true charms of majesty impair:
Rome by degrees advancing more in age,
Show'd sad remains of what had once been fair. Prior.

7. Inconstant; mutable; fickle.

In the ruling passion, there alone,
The wild are constant, and the cunning known. Pope.

8. Inordinate; loose.

Other bars he lays before me,
My riots past, my wild societies. Shakspeare.

Besides, thou art a beau; what's that my child?
A fop well drest, extravagant, and wild:
She that cries herbs has less impertinence,
And in her calling more of common sense. Dryden.

9. Uncouth; strange.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on 't? Shakspeare.

10. Done or made without any consistent order or plan.

With mountains as with weapons arm'd, they make Wild work in heav'n. Milton.

The sea was very necessary to the ends of providence, and it would have been a very wild world had it been without. Woodward.

11. Merely imaginary.

As universal as these appear to be, an effectual remedy might be applied: I am not at present upon a wild speculative project, but such a one as may be easily put in execution. Swift.

WILD. n. f. [from the adjective.] A desert; a tract uncultivated and uninhabited.

Whereas the scorching sky
Doth singe the sandy wilds of spiceful Barbary. Drayton.

We sometimes,
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want come forth Milton.

To town or village nigh.
This gentle knight
Forsook his easy couch at early day,
And to the woods and wilds pursued his way. Dryden.

Then Lybia first, of all her moisture drain'd Became a barren waste, a wild of sand. Addison.

Is there a nation in the wilds of Afric,
Amidst the barren rocks and burning sands,
That does not tremble at the Roman name? Addison.

W I L

You rais'd these hallow'd walls; the desert
smil'd,

And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.

WILD Basil. n. f. [acinus, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

WILD Cucumber. n. f. [elaterium, Lat.]
A plant.

The branches are somewhat like those of the cucumber, but have no tendrils; the fruit is prickly, and when ripe bursts with great elasticity, and abounds with fetid juice. Miller.

WILD Olive. n. f. [oleagnus, Latin; from olaia, oliva, and ayvos, vitex.] This plant hath leaves like those of the chaste tree, and a fruit like an olive. Miller.

To WILDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose or puzzle in an unknown or pathless tract.

The little courtiers, who ne'er come to know
The depth of factions, as in mazes go, Where interests meet, and cross so oft, that they
With too much care are wilder'd in the way. Dryden.

O thou! who free'st me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wilder'd in the maze of fate,
Be present still. Pope.

WILDERNESS. n. f. [from wild.]

1. A desert; a tract of solitude and savageness.

He travell'd through wide wasteful ground,
That nought but desert wilderness shew'd all around. Spenser.

When as the land she saw no more appear,
But a wild wilderness of waters deep,
Then 'gan she greatly to lament and weep. Spenser.

O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants! Shakspeare.

But who can always on the billows lie?
The wat'ry wilderness yields no supply. Waller.
All those animals have been obliged to change their woods and wildernesses for lodgings in cities. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. The state of being wild or disorderly.
Not in use.

The paths and bow'rs doubt not but our joint hands
Will keep from wilderness with ease. Milton.

WILDFIRE. n. f. [wild and fire.] A composition of inflammable materials, easy to take fire, and hard to be extinguished.

When thou rann'st up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire. Shakspeare.

Though brimstone, pitch, wildfire, burn easily, and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fiery wind as gunpowder. Bacon.

Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd. Sandys.

No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light. Addison.

In flames, like Semele's, be brought to bed,
While opening hell spouts wildfire at your head. Pope.

WILDGOOSECHASE. n. f. A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wild goose.

If our wits run the wildgoosechase, I have done;
for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakspeare.

Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation, that this wildgoosechase has cost him, and then say, what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but giddy frolick? L'Estrange.

WILDING. n. f. [wildelinghe, Dutch.]
A wild sour apple.

W I L

Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes, reaching from the ground. Dryden.

The red streak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, never pleasing to the palate. Mortimer.

The wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist its feculence. Phillips.

WILDLY. adv. [from wild.]

1. Without cultivation.

That which grows wildly of itself, is worth nothing. More.

2. Without tameness; with ferity.

3. With disorder; with perturbation or distraction.

Put your discourse into some frame, and start not so wildly from my affair. Shakspeare.

Mrs. Page, at the door, sweating, blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakspeare.

Young mothers wildly stare with fear oppress'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast. Dryden.

His fever being come to a height, he grew delirious, and talked very wildly. Female Quixote.

4. Without attention; without judgment;
heedlessly.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakspeare.

5. Capriciously; irrationally.

Who is there so wildly sceptical as to question whether the sun shall rise in the east? Wilkins.

6. Irregularly.

She, wildly wanton, wears by night away
The sign of all our labours done by day. Dryden.

WILDNESS. n. f. [from wild.]

1. Rudeness; disorder like that of uncultivated ground.

The heath, which was the third part of our plot,
I wish to be framed, as much as may be, to a natural wildness. Bacon.

Vainly thou tell'st me what the woman's care shall in the wildness of the wood prepare. Prior.

2. Inordinate vivacity; irregularity of manners.

This same starved justice hath done nothing but prated to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Turnbal-street; and every third word a lie. Shakspeare.

He is giv'n
To sports, to wildness, and much company. Shakspeare.

3. Savageness; brutality.

He came in like a wild man, but such a wildness as shew'd his eye-sight had tamed him; full of withered leaves, which, though they fell not, still threatened falling. Sidney.

4. Ferity; the state of an animal untamed;
contrary to tameness.

5. Uncultivated state.

Their wildness lose, and quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art. Dryden.

6. Deviation from a settled course; irregularity.

A delirium is but a short wildness of the imagination; a settled irregularity of fancy is distraction and madness. Watts.

7. Alienation of mind.

Ophelia, I wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness; so shall I hope your virtues
May bring him to his wonted way again. Shakspeare.

WILDSE'RVICE. n. f. [cratægus, Latin.]
A plant. Miller.

WILE. n. f. [pile, Saxon; wiel, Islandick.]
A deceit; a fraud; a trick; a strata-gem; a practice artful, sly, and infi-dious.

Their leader by his wiles had much obtain'd,
And done much mischief on the English state. Dan.

W I L

My sentence is for open war; of wiles,
More unexpert, I boast not; them let those Contrive who need. Milton.

Life essay'd the surest wile,
Gilding itself with Laura's smile. Roscommon.
So Sforza, curs'd with a too fertile brain,
Lost by his wiles the pow'r his wit did gain. Dryden.

The heart of man is full of wiles, artifices, and deceit, there is no guessing at what he is from his speeches. Addison.

Wisdom's 's above suspecting wiles,
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.

WILFUL. adj. [will and full.]

1. Stubborn; contumacious; perverse; inflexible.

The wilful never want woe. Proverbs.

2. Done or suffered by design.

Sthenobara herself did choak
With wilful cord, for wanting of her will. Spenser.

Thou to me
Art all things under heav'n, all places thou,
Who for my wilful crime art banish'd hence. Milton.

The silent stranger stood amaz'd to see Contempt of wealth, and wilful poverty. Dryden.
By chance he ancient amities forgot,
Or else expung'd them with one wilful blot:
Nor knew he God nor man, nor faith, nor friends,
But for by-purposes and worldly ends. Hanc.

WILFULLY. adv. [from wilful.]

1. Obstinate; stubbornly.

The mother, who being determinately, least I should say of a great lady wilfully, bent to marry her to Demagoras, tried all ways which a witty and hard-hearted mother could devise. Sidney.

Evil could the conceal her fire, and wilfully persevered she in it. Sidney.

Religion is matter of our freest choice; and if men will obstinately and wilfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy. Tillotson.

2. By design; on purpose.

That will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, through all difficulties. Hammer.

If you do not wilfully pass over any of your greater offences, but confess particularly, and repent seriously, of them, God will more easily pass by your lesser infirmities. Bishop Taylor.

This let him know;
Left, wilfully offending, he pretend Surprisal. Milton.

WILFULNESS. n. f. [from wilful.] Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.

So full of wilfulness and self-liking is our nature, that without some definitive sentence, which, being given, may stand, small hope there is that strifes will end. Hooker.

Thy causeless ruth repress;
He that his sorrow sought through wilfulness,
And his foe fetter'd would release again,
Deserves to taste his folly's fruit. Spenser.

Never hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakspeare.

Sins of presumption are such as proceed from pride, arrogancy, wilfulness, and haughtiness of man's heart. Perkins.

A stiff and stubborn obstinacy is not so much firmness and resolution, as wilfulness. L'Estrange.
That is not hastily to be interpreted obstinacy or wilfulness, which is the natural product of their age. Locke.

WILILY. adv. [from wily.] By strata-gem; fraudulently.

They did work wilyly, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors. Jobson.

WILINESS. n. f. [from wily.] Cunning;
guile.

The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the crafty wiliness that they have imagined. Psalms.

She supplied the weakness of force by wiliness of art, and advantage of treaty. Howell.

WILL. n. f. [pilla, Saxon; wille, Dutch.]

1. That power by which we desire and purpose; velleity.

What freedom the will naturally, under this corrupt state, hath, I do not consider. Hammond.

The will cannot be constrained. Perkins.

Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards any end, is termed choice. Hooker.

2. Choice; arbitrary determination.

Will is the power which the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa. Locke.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,

To be so cruel to an humble foe?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill;

If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.

These things have a shew of wisdom in will, worship and humility. Colossians.

Will holds the scepter in the soul,
And on the passions of the heart doth reign.

Davies.

The truth is, such a man understands by his will, and believes a thing true or false, merely as it agrees or disagrees with a violent inclination; and therefore, whilst that inclination lasts in its strength, he discovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.

3. Discretion; choice.

Religion was observed in the beginning of the world, before there were civil laws amongst them; I mean any other than the meer wills of their princes and governors. Wilkins.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.

4. Command; direction.

At his first sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the south wind bloweth. Ecclesiasticus.

Our prayers should be according to the will of God; they should have nothing in them but what is wise, and holy, and heavenly. Laro.

5. Disposition; inclination; desire.

I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation.

—You're welcome; what's your will?

Shakspeare.

He hath a will, he hath a power to perform.

Drummond.

He said, and with so good a will to die

Did to his breast the fatal point apply,

It found his heart.

Dryden.

6. Power; government.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies.

Psalms.

He had his will of his maid before he could go; he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained?

Locke.

7. Divine determination.

I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground. The wills above be done; but I would fain die a dry death.

Shakspeare.

8. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects.

Another branch of their revenue still remains, beyond their boundless right to kill, Their father yet alive, impower'd to make a will.

Dryden.

Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only?

Stephens.

9. Good-will. Favour; kindness.

I'll to the doctor, he hath my good-will,
And none but he to marry with Nan Page.

Shakspeare.

10. Good-will. Right intention.

Some preach Christ of envy, and some of good-will.

Philippians.

11. Ill-will. Malice; malignity.

Will with a wisp. n. s. Jack with a lantern.

Will with the wisp is of a round figure, in bigness like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax-candle; at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed near at hand, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth; and are more frequent in places that are unctuous, mouldy, marshy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying-places, and places of execution, dunghills. They commonly appear in summer and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six feet from the ground. Now they dilate themselves, and now contract; now they go on like waves, and rain as it were sparks of fire, but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them. Some that have been caught were observed to consist of a shining, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only shining; so that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from putrified plants, or carcases by the heat of the sun; which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Muschenbroek.

Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns
O'er hills and sinking bogs. Gay.

To WILL. v. a. [wilgan, Gothick; pillan, Saxon; willen, Dutch.]

1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done; or not be, or not be done.

To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they see to be good. Hooker.

Let Richard be restored to his blood,

As will the rest; so willeth Winchester.

Shakspeare.

I speak not of God's determining his own will, but his predetermining the acts of our will. There is as great difference betwixt these two, as betwixt my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful.

Hammond.

Whoever wills the doing of a thing, if the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it; and whoever does not do that thing which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.

A man that sits still is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To be inclined or resolved to have.

She's too rough for me;

There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife?

Shakspeare.

3. To command; to direct.

St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat on the Sunday, and to reserve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there.

Hooker.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was will'd to love his enemies?

Shakspeare.

Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour's all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good.

Shakspeare.

He willed him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should win.

Knolles.

If they had any business, his majesty willed that they should attend.

Clarendon.

'Tis yours, O queen! to will
The work which duty binds me to fulfil.

Dryden.

4. It has a loose and slight signification.

Let the circumstances of life be what or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement.

Watts.

5. It is one of the signs of the future tense, of which it is difficult to show or limit the signification.

I will come. I am determined to come: importing choice.

Thou wilt come. It must be so that thou must come, importing necessity; or, it shall be that thou shalt come, importing choice.

Wilt thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice.

He will come. He is resolved to come; or, it must be that he must come: importing either choice or necessity.

It will come. It must so be that it must come: importing necessity.

The plural follows the analogy of the singular.

Willi and Vili, among the English Saxons, as viele at this day among the Germans, signified many. So Willielmus is the defender of many; Wilfred, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polymachus, Polycrates, and Polyphilus. Gibson.

WILLING. adj. [from will.]

1. Inclined to any thing; consenting; not disposed to refuse.

Some other able, and as willing, pays

The rigid satisfaction.

Milton.

Can any man trust a better support, under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him?

Bentley.

2. Pleased; desirous.

He, willing to please one in authority, forced all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion.

Wisdom.

He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet.

Milton.

3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.

As many as were willing-hearted brought bracelets and earrings.

Exodus.

4. Ready; complying.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with conscience, inferiors for conscience sake the *willing*er to obey.

Hooker.

We've willing dames enough.

Shakspeare.

5. Chosen.

They're held with his melodious harmony

In willing chains, and sweet captivity.

Milton.

6. Spontaneous.

Forbear, if thou hast pity;
These groans proceed not from a senseless plant,
No spouts of blood run willing from a tree.

Dryden.

7. Consenting.

How can hearts not free serve willing?

Milton.

WILLINGLY. adv. [from will.]

1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance.

That preservation of peace and unity amongst christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them.

Hooker.

I dare not make myself so guilty,

To give up willingly that noble title

Your master wed me to.

Shakspeare.

'Tis ransom, if my whole inheritance

May compass it, shall willingly be paid.

Milton.

2. By one's own desire.

The condition of that people is not so much to be envied, as some would willingly represent it.

Addison.

WILLINGNESS. n. s. [from willing.]

Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other.

Ben Jonson.

It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner, that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good, as far as our power reacheth.

Calamy.

Fear never yet a generous mind did gain;

We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain;

Constraint, in all things, makes the pleasure less;

Sweet is the love which comes with willingness.

Dryden.

WILLOW. n. s. [pehe, Sax. salix, Latin; gawilou, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers.

It hath amentaceous flowers, consisting of several stamina, which are collected into a spike, but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds.

Miller.

W I N

I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken; to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt. Shakspeare.

In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks. Shakspeare.
Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake. Shakspeare.
When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes he resorts obscur'd with reeds,
And hoary willows which the moisture feeds. Sandys.

Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Their harps upon the neighboring willows hung,
No joyous hymn encouraging their tongue. Prior.
WILLOWISH. adj. [from willow.] Resembling the colour of willow.

Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour. Walton.
WILLOWWEED. n. f. [from willow and weed; lysimaquia, Latin.] A plant. Ainsworth.

WILLOWWORT. n. f. A plant. Miller.
WILLY. adj. [from wile.] Cunning; fly; full of stratagem; fraudulent; insidious; subtle; mischievously artful.

They are so cautious and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilities and shifts. Spenser.

In the wily snake
Whatever flights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit and native subtilty Proceeding. Milton.

Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleased, in mere compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Cains. South.

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound:
'Tis love said she. Dryden.

WIMBLE. n. f. [wimpel, old Dutch, from wemelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

At harvest-home, trembling to approach
The little barrel which he fears to broach,
He 'flays the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack. Dryden.
As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble, some huge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.
The trepan is like a wimble used by joiners. Sharp.

WIMBLE. adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched:
Therewith afraid I ran away;
But he, that earst seem'd but to play,
A shaft in earnest snatched. Spenser.

WIMPLE. n. f. [peplion, Latin.] A plant.

WIMPLE. n. f. [guimple, Fr.] A hood; a veil. It is printed in Spenser, perhaps by mistake, wimble.

So fair and fresh, as fairest flower in May,
For she had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow-like sad wimble thrown away. Spenser.

The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping pins. Isaiab.

To WIMPLE. v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil.

The same did hide
Under a veil that *wimble*d was full low. Spenser.

WIN, whether initial or final, in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from win, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people, from the Saxon pine, i. e. dear, beloved. In the names of places it implies a battle fought there. Gibson.

To WIN. v. a. pret. wan and won; part. pass. won. [pinna, Sax. winnen, Dutch.]

1. To gain by conquest.
The town of Gaza, where the enemy lay encamped, was not so strong but it might be won. Knolles.

He gave him a command in his navy, and under his good conduct won many islands. Heylin.
His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win. Milton.

Follow chearful to the trembling town;
Press but an entrance, and presume it won. Dryden.

2. To gain the victory in a contest.
Loyalty is still the same,
Whether it win or lose the game;
True as the dial to the sun,
Altho' it be not shin'd upon. Hudibras.

I five years at Tarentum wan
The questorship, and then our love began. Denham.
Thy well-breath'd horse
Impels the flying car, and wins the course, Dryden.

3. To gain something withheld, or something valuable.

When you see my son, tell him, that his sword can never win the honour that he loses. Shakspeare.
Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray. Pope.

4. To obtain; to allure to kindness or compliance.

Thy virtue won me; with virtue preserve me.
Dost thou love me? Keep me then still worthy to be beloved. Sidney.

Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath fought to win me. Shakspeare.

5. To gain by play.
He had given a disagreeable vote in parliament, for which reason not a man would have so much correspondence with him as to win his money. Addison.

6. To gain by persuasion.
They win great numbers to receive
With joy the tidings brought from heav'n. Milton.

7. To gain by courtship.
She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore to be won. Shakspeare.
No tears, Celia, now shall win
My resolv'd heart to return;
I have search'd thy soul within,
And find nought but pride and scorn. Carew.
That flood witness'd his inconstant flame,
When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame. Gay.

To WIN. v. n.

1. To gain the victory.
Nor is it aught but just,
That he, who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.

2. To gain influence or favour.
You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your master, and not upon his affections only. Bacon.
You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others. Dryden.
Thy words like musick every breast controul,
Steal thro' the air, and win upon the soul. Pope.

3. To gain ground.
The rabble will in time win upon power. Shakspeare.

4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.
Charles, I will play no more to-night:
My mind's not on 't, you are too hard for me,
—Sir, I did never win of you before.
—But little, Charles;
Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play. Shakspeare.

To WINCE. v. n. [gwingo, Welsh.] To kick, as impatient of a rider, or of pain.

W I N

I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word. Shakspeare.

Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince. Ben Jonson.

The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if h' had been beside his sense. Hudibras.

WINCER. n. f. [from wince.] A kicking beast.

WINCH. n. f. [guincher, Fr. to twist.] A windlace; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.

Put a winch with the wheel. Mortimer.

To WINCH. v. a. [The same with wince; or perhaps from guincher, French, to twist; winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.

We who have free souls
It touches not, let the gall'd jade winch;
Our withers are unwrung. Shakspeare.

Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled!
Nor did I ever winch or grudge it. Hudibras.

This last allusion gall'd the panther more;
Yet seem'd she not to winch, though shrewdly pain'd. Dryden.

Their consciences are galled; and this makes them winch and fling, as if they had some nettle. Tilulsen.

WINCOPIPE. n. f.
There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the wincopipe; which if it opens in the morning, you may be sure a fair day will follow. Bacon.

WIND. n. f. [wind, Saxon; wind, Dutch; gwynt, Welsh.]

1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other, with an impetus that is sensible to us: wherefore it was not ill called by the ancients a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of air. Maschenbroek.

The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock, the oak, not to be wind shaken. Shakspeare.

Love's heralds should be thoughts
Which ten times faster glide than the sun beams,
Driving back shadows over lowering hills,
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love;
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings. Shakspeare.

Falmouth lieth farther out in the trade way, and so offereth a sooner opportunity to wind-driven ships than Plymouth. Carew.

Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction more in one place than another, by the sun-beams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions. Cheyne.

2. Direction of the blast from a particular point; as eastward, westward.

I'll give thee a wind,
I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow;
All the quarters that they know
I' th' shipman's card. Shakspeare.

In the year 1300, one Flavio of Malgha, in the realm of Naples, found out the compass, or pinax nautica, consisting of eight winds only, the four principal, and four collateral; and not long after, the people of Bruges and Antwerp perfected that excellent invention, adding twenty-four other subordinate winds or points. Heylin.

3. Breath; power or act of respiration.
If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. Shakspeare.

His wind he never took whilst the cup was at his mouth, but justly observed the rule of drinking with one breath. Hakerwill.

The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in purfy old men, seems to agree most with the orange. Temple.

It stopp'd at once the passage of his wind, And the free soul to flirring air resign'd. Dryden.

4. Air caused by any action.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakspeare.

In an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes. Milton.

5. Breath modulated by an instrument.

Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create sound; as in pipes and wind instruments. Bacon.

Their instruments were various in their kind;
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind. Dryden.

6. Air impregnated with scent.

A hare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,
By often shifting into distant grounds,
Till finding all his artifices vain,
To save his life, he leap'd into the main.
But there, alas! he could no safety find,
A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind. Swift.

7. Flatulence; windiness.

It turns
Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind. Milton.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.

Think not with wind of airy threats to awe. Milton.

9. Down the WIND. To decay.

A man that had a great veneration for an image in his house, found that the more he prayed to it to prosper him in the world, the more he went down the wind still. L'Estrange.

10. To take or have the WIND. To gain or have the upper hand.

Let a king in council beware how he opens his own inclinations too much; for else counsellors will but take the wind of him, instead of giving free counsel. Bacon.

To WIND. v. a. pret. wound, in Pope winded; part. wound. [windan, Sax. winden, Dutch; from the noun.]

1. To blow; to sound by inflation.

The squire 'gan nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Spens.

Every Triton's horn is winding,
Welcome to the wat'ry plain. Dryden.

Ye vig'rous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.

2. To turn round; to twist.

Nero could touch and time the harp well; but in government sometimes he used to wind the pins too high, and sometimes let them down too low. Bacon.

The figure of a sturdy woman, done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloaths; in in which act she wrings out the water that made the fountain. Wotton.

Wind the wood-bine round this arbour. Milton.

3. To regulate in motion; to turn to this or that direction.

He vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship. Shakspeare.

In a commonwealth or realm,
The government is call'd the helm;
With which, like vessels under sail,
They're turn'd and winded by the tail. Hudibras.

Mr. Whiston did not care to give more than short, general hints of this famous challenge, and the issue of it; but he endeavours to wind and turn himself every way to evade its force. Waterland.

6. To introduce by insinuation.

You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd offices, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shakspeare.

Edmund, seek him out, wind me into him, frame the business after your own wisdom. Shakspeare.

Little arts and dexterities they have to wind in such things into discourse. Govern. of the Tongue.

7. To change.

Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy. Addison.

8. To entwine; to enfold; to encircle.

Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms. Shakspeare.

You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance. Shakspeare.

Sometime am I
All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness. Shakspeare.

9. To WIND out. To extricate.

When he found himself dangerously embarked, he bethought himself of all possible ways to disentangle himself, and to wind himself out of the labyrinth
he was in. Clarendon.

10. To WIND up. To bring to a small compass, as a bottom of thread.

Without solemnly winding up one argument, and intimating that he began another, he lets his thoughts, which were fully possessed of the matter, run in one continued strain. Locke.

11. To WIND up. [used of a watch.] To convolve the spring.

I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel. Shakspeare.

12. To WIND up. To put into a state of renovated or continued motion.

Fate seem'd to wind him up for fourscore years,
Yet freshly ran he on ten winters more:
Till, like a clock worn out with calling time,
The wheels of weary life at last stood still. Dryden.

Will not the author of the universe, having made an automaton which can wind up itself, see whether it hath stood still or gone true? Grew.

Is there a tongue, like Delia's o'er her cup,
That runs for ages without winding up? Young.

13. To WIND up. To raise by degrees.

These he did so wind up to his purpose, that they withdrew from the court. Hayward.

When they could not coolly convince him, they railed, and called him an heretick: thus they wound up his temper to a pitch, and treacherously made use of that infirmity. Atterbury.

14. To WIND up. To straiten a string by turning that on which it is rolled; to put in tune.

Hylas! why sit we mute,
Now that each bird saluteth the spring?
Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute,
Never canst thou want matter to sing. Waller.

Your lute may wind its strings but little higher,
To tune their notes to that immortal quire. Prior.

15. To WIND up. To put in order for regular action: from a watch.

O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach of his abused nature;
Th' untun'd and jarring senses O wind up
Of this child changed father. Shakspeare.

The weyrd sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine:
Peace! the charm's wound up. Shakspeare.

To WIND. v. n.

1. To turn; to change.

So swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast our fleetest wits a mile behind. Dryden.

2. To turn; to be convolved.

Some plants can support themselves; and some others creep along the ground, or wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves. Bacon.

Stairs of a solid newel spread only upon one small newel, as the several folds of fans spread about their centre; but these, because they sometimes wind and sometimes fly off from that winding, take more room up in the staircase. Moxon.

3. To move round.

If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still;
But wind about till thou halt topp'd the hill. Denham.

4. To proceed in flexures.

It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
As rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakspeare.

Ever more did winde
About his bosome a most crafty minde. Chapman.

He winds with ease
Through the pure marble air his oblique way, Amongst innumerable stars. Milton.

It was a rock winding with one ascent. Milton.

The silver Thames, her own domestick flood,
Shall bear her vessels, like a sweeping train;
And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
With longing eyes to meet her face again. Dryden.

You that can search those many corner'd minds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds. Dryden.

Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the paffes open, wind along. Gay.

5. Wound is commonly the preterit. Pope has used winded.

Swift ascending from the azure wave,
He took the path that winded to the cave. Pope.

6. To be extricated; to be disentangled: with out.

Long lab'ring underneath, ere they could wind
Out of such prison. Milton.

WINDBOUND. adj. [wind and bound.]
Confined by contrary winds.

Yet not for this the windbound navy weigh'd;
Slack were their sails, and Neptune disobey'd. Dryden.

When I bestir myself, it is high sea in his house;
and when I sit still, his affairs forsooth are wind- bound. Spektor.

Is it reasonable that our English fleet, which used to be the terror of the ocean, should be windbound? Spektor.

WINDEGG. n. s. An egg not impregnated; an egg that does not contain the principles of life.

Sound eggs sink, and such as are addled swim;
as do also those termed hypenemia, or windeggs. Brown.

WINDER. n. s. [from wind.]

1. An instrument or person by which any thing is turned round.

The winder shows his workmanship so rare
As doth the fleece excel, and mocks her loofer clew;
As neatly bottom'd up as nature forth it drew. Drayton.

To keep troublesome servants out of the kitchen, leave the winder sticking on the jack, to fall on their heads. Swift.

2. A plant that twists itself round others.

Plants that put forth their sap hastily, have their bodies not proportionable to their length; and therefore they are winders and creepers, as ivy and bryony. Bacon.

WINDFALL. n. s. [wind and fall.]

1. Fruit blown down from the tree.

Gather now, if ripe, your winter fruits, as apples, to prevent their falling by the great winds; also gather your windfalls. Evelyn.

2. An unexpected legacy.

WINDFLOWER. n. s. The anemone. A flower.

WINDGALL. n. s. [wind and gall.]

Windgalls are soft, yielding, flatulent tumours or bladders, full of corrupt jelly, which grow upon each side of the fetlock joints, and are so painful in hot weather and hard ways, that they make a horse to halt. They are caused by violent straining, or by a horse's standing on a sloping floor, or from extreme labour and heat, or by blows. Farrier's Dict.

His horse infected with the fashions, full of wind- galls, and sped with spavins. Shakspeare.

WINDGUN. n. s. [wind and gun.] Gun which discharges the bullet by means of wind compressed.

The windgun is charged by the forcible compression of air, being injected through a syringe; the strife and distention of the imprisoned air serving, by the help of little falls or shuts within; to stop and keep close the vents by which it was admitted.

Wilkins.

Forc'd from windguns, lead itself can fly,
And pond'rous slugs cut swiftly through the sky.

Pope.

WINDINESS. n. f. [from windy.]

1. Fulness of wind; flatulence.

A windiness and puffing up of your stomach after dinner, and in the morning.

Harvey.

Orifices are prepared for the letting forth of the rarified spirits in ructus, or windiness, the common effects of all fermented liquors.

Floyer.

2. Tendency to generate wind.

Sena loseth somewhat of its windiness by decocting; and, generally, subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation.

Bacon.

3. Tumour; puffiness.

From this his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling windiness of much knowledge, issued this.

Brerewood.

WINDING. n. f. [from wind.] Flexure; meander.

It was the pleasantest voyage in the world to follow the windings of this river Inn, through such a variety of pleasing scenes as the course of it naturally led us.

Addison.

The ways of heaven are dark and intricate;

Our understanding traces them in vain,

Now sees with how much art the windings run,

Nor where the regular confusion ends.

Addison.

WINDINGSHEET. n. f. [wind and sheet.]

A sheet in which the dead are enwrapped.

These arms of mine shall be thy windingsheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre,
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.

Shakspeare.

The great windingsheets, that bury all things in oblivion, are deluges and earthquakes.

Bacon.

The chaste Penelope having, as she thought, lost Ulysses at sea, employed her time in preparing a windingsheet for Laertes, the father of her husband.

Spektator.

WINDLASS. n. f. [wind and lace.]

1. A handle by which a rope or lace is wrapped together round a cylinder.

2. A handle by which any thing is turned.

Thus do we of wisdom and of reach,

With windlasses, and with assays of bias,

By indirections find directions out.

Shakspeare.

WINDLE. n. f. [from To wind.] A spindle.

Ainslie.

WINDMILL. n. f. [wind and mill.] A mill turned by the wind.

We, like Don Quixote, do advance

Against a windmill our vain lance.

Waller.

Such a sailing chariot might be more conveniently framed with moveable sails, whose force may be impressed from their motion, equivalent to those in a windmill.

Wilkins.

Windmills grind twice the quantity in an hour that watermills do.

Mortimer.

His fancy has made a giant of a windmill, and he's now engaging it.

F. Atterbury.

WINDOW. n. f. [windue, Danish. Skinner thinks it originally wind-door.]

1. An aperture in a building by which air and light are intromitted.

Being one day at my window all alone,

Many strange things happened me to see.

Spenser.

A fair view her window yields,

The town, the river, and the fields.

Waller.

He through a little window cast his sight,

Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light;

But ev'n that glimmering serv'd him to descry

Th' inevitable charms of Emily.

Dryden.

When you leave the windows open for air, leave books on the window-seat, that they may get air too.

Swift.

2. The frame of glass or any other materials that cover the aperture.

To thee I do commend my watchful soul,

Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:

Sleeping or waking, oh defend me still! Shakspeare.

In the sun's light, let into my darkened chamber through a small round hole in my window-shutter, at about ten or twelve feet from the window, I placed a lens.

Newton.

3. Lines crossing each other.

The favourite, that just begins to prattle,

Is very humourfome, and makes great clutter,

Till he has windows on his bread and butter.

King.

4. An aperture resembling a window.

To WINDOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with windows.

Between these half columns above, the whole room was windowed round.

Wotton.

With pert flat eyes she window'd well its head;
A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead.

Pope.

2. To place at a window.

Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome, and see

Thy master thus with pleacht arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdued

To penetrative shame?

Shakspeare.

3. To break into openings.

Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,

That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,

How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides,

Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these?

Shakspeare.

WINDPIPE. n. f. [wind and pipe.] The passage for breath; the aspera arteria.

Let gallows gape for dogs, let man go free,

And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate.

Shakspeare.

The wezzon, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part intervient to voice and respiration; thereby the air descendeth unto the lungs, and is communicated unto the heart.

Brown.

The quacks of government, who sat

At sh' unregard'd helm of state,

Consider'd timely how t' withdraw,

And save their windpipes from the law.

Hudibras.

Because continual respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with annular cartilages.

Ray.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia: these end in small air-bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it.

ingly*, as those do that are purblind; but if any thing that is black, he looketh upon it with a broad and full eye. Peacbam.

WINNER. n. f. [from win.] One who wins.

A gamester, having lost all, borroweth of his next fellow-gamester somewhat to maintain play; which he setting unto him again, shortly winneth all from the winner. Spenser.

Go together,
You precious winners all; your exultation Partake to every one. Shakespeare.

Beshrew the winners, for they play'd me false. Shakespeare.

Whether the winner laughs or no, the loser will complain; and rather than quarrel with his own skill, will do it at the dice. Temple.

WINNING. participial adj. [from win.] Attractive; charming.

Yet less fa'r
Less winning soft, less amiably mild,
Than that smooth watery image. Milton.

On her, as queen,
A pomp of winning graces waited still;
And from about her shot darts of desire
Into all eyes, to wish her still in sight. Milton.

Cato's soul
Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks,
While winning mildness and attractive smiles
Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
Softens the rigour of her father's virtues. Addison.

WINNING. n. f. [from win.] The sum won.

A simile in one of Congreve's prologues compares a writer to a buttering gamester, that stakes all his winnings upon every cast; so that if he loses the last WINTER. n. f. [pinter, Saxon; win-ter, Danish, German, and Dutch.] The cold season of the year.

Though he were already steep into the winter of his age, he found himself warm in those desires, which were in his son far more excusable. Sidney.

After summer evermore succeeds,
The barren winter with his nipping cold. Shaksp.

A woman's story at a winter's fire. Shaksp.

He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana: a gun of winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously;
the very ice of chastity is in them. Shakespeare.

The two beneath the distant poles complain
Of endless winter and perpetual rain. Dryden.

Lie'st thou asleep beneath those hills of snow?
Stretch out thy lazy limbs; awake, awake,
And winter from thy furry mantle shake. Dryden.

W I P

Suppose our poet was your foe before,
Yet now the bus'ness of the field is o'er:
'Tis time to let your civil wars alone,
When troops are into winter quarters gone.

Dryden.

He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter-nights for the entertainment of others.

Locke.

Stern winter smiles on that auspicious clime,
The fields are florid with unfading prime.

Pope.

To define winter, I consider first wherein it agrees with summer, spring, autumn, and I find they are all seasons of the year; therefore a season of the year is a genus: then I observe wherein it differs from these, and that is in the shortness of the days; therefore this may be called its special nature, or difference: then, by joining these together, I make a definition. Winter is that season of the year, wherein the days are shortest.

Watts.

To WINTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To pass the winter.

The fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them.

From either eye, and wip'd them with her hair.

Milton.

Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries.

Denham.

2. To take away by tension.

W I R

Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sulliage behind.

Decay of Piety.

3. To strike off gently.

Let me wipe off his honourable dew,
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks. Shaksp.
Some natural tears they dropp'd, but wip'd them soon. Milton.

A young man, having suffered many tortures, escaped with life, and told his fellow christians, that the pain of them had been rendered tolerable by the presence of an angel, who stood by him and wiped off the tears and sweat.

Addison.

4. To clear away.

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples; reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour.

Shakespeare.

The next bordering lords commonly encroach one upon another, as one is stronger, or lie still in wait to wipe them out of their lands.

Spenser.

6. To WIPE out. To efface.

This blot, that they object against your house,
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament.

Shakespeare.

As thou lov'st me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services by leaving me now.

Shakespeare.

Take one in whom decrepid old age has blotted out the memory of his past knowledge, and clearly wiped out the ideas his mind was formerly stored with, and stopped up all the passages for new ones, to enter; or if there be some of the inlets yet left open, the impressions made are scarce perceived.

Locke.

WIPE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Act of cleansing.

2. A blow; a stroke; a jeer; a gibe; a sarcasm.

To statesmen would you give a wipe,
You print it in Italick type:
When letters are in vulgar shapes,
'Tis ten to one the wit escapes;
But when in capitals express'd,
The dullest reader smokes the jest.

Swift.

3. [vanellus.] A bird.

Ainsworth.

WI'PER. n. f. [from wipe.] An instrument or person by which any thing is wiped.

The maids and their makes,
At dancing and wakes,
Had their napkins and posies,
And the wipers for their noses.

Ben Jonson.

WIRE. n. f. [virer, French, to draw round.
Skinner.] Metal drawn into slender threads.

Tane was the damsel; and without remorse
The king condemn'd her, guiltless to the fire:
Her veil and mantle pluckt they off by force,
And bound her tender arms in twisted wire.

Fairfax.

Thou shalt be wipt with wire, and stew'd in brine,

Shakespeare.

The foldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ,
That's strong with wire instead of veins,
In whose embraces you 're in chains.

Beaumont and Fletcher.

And the cherubick host, in thousand quires,
Touch their immortal harps of golden wires. Milt.
Some roll a mighty stone, some laid along,
And, bound with burning wires, on spokes of wheels are hung.

Dryden.

To WI'REDRAW. v. a. [wire and draw.]

Those who have need of unmixed silver, as gilders and wiredrawers, must, besides an equal weight of silver mixed with other metals, give an overplus to reward the refiner's skill.

Locke.

To WIS. v. a. pret. and part. pass. wisf.
[wissen, German; wysen, Dutch.] To think; to imagine. Obsolete.

Thus proud and fierce, unto the hearts he stept
Of them poor souls; and cutting reason's reins,
Made them his own before they had it wisf.

Sidney.

When Mammon saw his purpose mist,
Him to entrap unwares, another way he wisf.

Spenser.

This book, advisedly read, and diligently followed but one year at home, would do a young gentleman more good, I wisf, than three years travel abroad.

Afchan.

There be fools alive, I wisf, Silver'd o'er, and so was this.

Shakespeare.

Marry with a king,
A batchelor, a handsome stripling too,
I wisf your grandam had a worser match.

Shaksp.

When for more worlds the Macedonian cried,
He wisf not Thetys in her lap did hide
Another yet, a world reserv'd for you,
To make more great than that he did subdue.

Waller.

WISDOM. n. f. [pyrdom, Saxon; wijsdom, Danish.]

1. Sapience; the power of judging rightly; the knowledge of divine and human things.

That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power.

Hacker.

As from senses reason's work doth spring,
So many reasons understanding gain,
And many understandings knowledge bring,
And by much knowledge wisdom we obtain.

Davies.

Wisdom is that which makes men judge what are the best ends, and what the best means to attain them, and gives a man advantage of counsel and direction.

Temple.

As science is properly that knowledge which re-lateth to the essences of things, so wisdom to their operations.

Grew.

O sacred solitude! divine retreat!
Choice of the prudent, envy of the great!
By thy pure stream, or in the waving shade,
We court fair wisdom, that celestial maid.

Young.

2. Prudence; skill in affairs; judicious conduct.

'Tis much he dares,
And to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety.

Shakespeare.

If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it.

Shakespeare.

WISE. adj. [pyr, Saxon; wijs, Dutch and Danish.]

1. Sapient; judging rightly; having much knowledge.

Heav'n is for thee too high; be lowly wisf.

Milton.

All the writings of the ancient Goths were composed in verse, which were called runes, or wiles, and from thence the term of wise came.

Temple.

Since the floods demand
For their descent a prone and sinking land,
Does not this due declivity declare
A wise director's providential care?

Blackmore.

The wisest and best men, in all ages, have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality.

Addison.

2. Judicious; prudent; practically knowing.

There were ten virgins; five of them were wise,
and five were foolish.

Martineau.

I would have you wise unto that which is good,
and simple concerning evil.

Come, shepherd's boy, let now thy heart be bow'd
To make itself to my least look a slave, Sidney.

Ere we farther pass, I will devise
A passport for us both, in fittest wife. Spenser.

On this wife ye shall bless Israel. Numbers.

The lovers standing in this doleful wife,
A warrior bold approached. Fairfax.

With foam upon thy lips, and sparkling eyes,
Thou say'st and dost in such outrageous wife,
That mad Orestes, if he saw the show,
Would swear thou wert the madder of the two. Dryden.

'Tis in no wife strange that such a one should believe, that things were blindly shuffled. Woodw.

WISSEACRE. n. f. [It was anciently written wissegger, as the Dutch wiseggher, a foothsayer.]

1. A wise or sententious man. Obsolete.

2. A fool; a dunce.

Why, says a wisseacre that sat by him, were I as the king of France, I would scorn to take part with footmen, Addison.

WISELY. adv. [from wife.] Judiciously;
prudently.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire. Milton.

He sits like discontented Damocles,
When by the sportive tyrant wisely shown
The dangerous pleasure of a flatter'd throne. Dryden.

Admitting their principles to be true, they act wisely: they keep their end, evil as it is, steadily in view. Rogers.

The doctors, tender of their fame,
Wisely on me lay all the blame:
We must confess his case was nice,
But he would never take advice. Swift.

WISENESS. n. f. [from wife.] Wisdom;
sapience. Obsolete.

No less deserveth his wittiness in devising, his pithiness in uttering, his pastoral rudeness, and his moral wiseness. Spenser.

To WISH. v. n. [pirean, Saxon.]

1. To have strong desire; to long.

The sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wished in himself to die. Jonah.

If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But when they seldom come, they wish'd-for come. Shakespeare.

They have more than heart could wish. Isaiah.

With lowliness majestick from her seat,

W I S

And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay,
Rose, and went forth. Milton.

There are ships prepar'd by my command,
That shall convey you to the wish'd-for port. Addison.

That Noah or Janus understood navigation, may be very well supported by this image found upon the first Roman coins. One side was stamp'd with a Janus bisrons, and the other with a rostrum, or prow of a ship. This is as good an argument as an antiquary could wish for. Arbutnot.

And much he wish'd, but durst not ask to part. Parnel.

2. To be disposed or inclined.
Those potentates, who do not wish well to his affairs, have shewn respect to his personal character. Addison.

3. It has a slight signification of hope or fear.

I wish it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune, to have met with such a miser as I am. Sidney.

To WISH. v. a.

1. To desire; to long for,

He was fain to pull him out by the heels, and shew him the beast as dead as he could wish it. Sidney.

2. To recommend by wishing.

Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death. Shakspeare.

3. To imprecate.

If heavens have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee;
O let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation. Shakspeare.

4. To ask.

Digby should find the best way to make Antrim communicate the affair to him, and to wish his assistance. Clarendon.

WISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Longing desire.

To his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton.

A wish is properly the desire of a man sitting or lying still; but an act of the will, is a man of business vigorously going about his work. South.

2. Thing desired.

What next I bring shall please thee; be assur'd,
Thy likeness, thy fit help, thy other self,
Thy wish, exactly to thy heart's desire. Milton.

3. Desire expressed.

Shame come to Romeo! —
—Blister'd be thy tongue
For such a wish! Shakspeare.

I admire your whig principles of resistance in the spirit of the Barcelonians: I join in your wish for them. Pope.

WISHEDLY. adv. [from wished.] According to desire. Not used.

What could have happened unto him more wish- edly, than with his great honour to keep the town still. Kneller.

WISHER. n. f. [from wish.]

1. One who longs.

2. One who expresses wishes.

Wishers and woulders are never good householders. Proverbs.

With half that with the wisher's eyes be press'd. Shakspeare.

WISHFUL. adj. [from wish and full.]

1. Longing; showing desire.

From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love,
To greet mine own land with my wishful fight. Shakspeare.

2. Desirable; exciting wishes.

Nor could I see a soile, where e'er I came,
More sweete and wishful. Chapman.

WISHFULLY. adv. [from wishful.] Earnestly; with longing.

WISKET. n. f. A basket. Ainsworth.

WISP. n. f. [wisp, Swedish and old Dutch.]

A small bundle, as of hay or straw.

A wisp of straw for a ballad. Shakspeare.

W I T

A gentleman would fast five days, without meat, bread, or drink; but the same used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelted on;
and amongst those some esculent herb of strong scent,
as onions. Bacon.

Jews, who their whole wealth can lay
In a small basket, on a wisp of hay. Dryden.

WIST. The pret. and part. of wit.

WISTFUL. adj.

1. Attentive; earnest; full of thought.

Why, Grubbinel, dost thou so wistful seem?

There's sorrow in thy look. Gay.

2. It is used by Swift, as it seems, for wishful; though it may mean earnest, eager.

Lifting up one of my fashes, I cast many a wistful melancholy look towards the sea. Swift.

WISTFULLY. adv. [from wistful.] Attentively; earnestly.

With that he fell again to pry
Through perspective more wistfully. Hudibras.

WISTLY. adv. [from wis.] Attentively; earnestly.

Speaking it, he wistly look'd on me;

As who shall say, I would thou wert the man. Shakspeare.

To WIT. v. n. [pirean, Saxon.] To know.

This word is now only used in the phrase to wit, that is to say.

There is an officer, to wit, the sheriff of the shire, whose office it is to walk up and down his bailiwick. Spenser.

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave;
As witting I no other comfort have. Shakspeare.

WIT. n. f. [pirean, Saxon; from pirean, to know.]

1. The powers of the mind; the mental faculties; the intellects. This is the original signification.

Who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? Shakspeare.

The king your father was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatch'd wit and judgment. Shakspeare.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth;

Will ever acts, and wit contemplates still;

And as from wit the power of wisdom riseth,
All other virtues daughters are of will.

Will is the prince, and wit the counsellor
Which doth for common good in council sit;

And when wit is resolv'd, will lends her power
To execute what is advis'd by wit. Davies.

For wit and pow'r their last endeavours bend
To outline each other. Dryden.

2. Imagination; quickness of fancy.

They never meet, but there's a skirmish of wit between them.—Alas, in our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the old man govern'd by one. Shakspeare.

Lewd, shallow, hair-brained huffs make atheism, and contempt of religion, the only badge and character of wit. South.

And though a tun in thy large bulk be writ,
Yet thou art but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

Wit lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the fancy.

Judgment, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another ideas wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude. Locke.

Could any but a knowing prudent cause
Begin such motions, and assign such laws?

If the great mind had form'd a different frame,
Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

3. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy, or by genius; the effect of wit.

All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me.
The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter than what I invent, and is invented, on me.

I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakspeare.

His works become the frippery of wit. B. Jonson.
The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. Sprat.

The definition of wit is only this, that it is a propriety of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.

Let a lord once but own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens, and the style refines! Pope.

4. A man of fancy.

Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe, and make themselves the common enemies of mankind. L'Estrange.

A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy: even his fools were infected with the disease of their author. Dryden.
To tell them would a hundred tongues require;
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire. Pope.

5. A man of genius.

Hence 'tis a wit, the greatest word of fame,
Grows such a common name;
And wits by our creation they become,
Just so as titular bishops made at Rome:

'Tis not a rule, 'tis not a jest
Admir'd with laughter at a feast,
Nor florid talk, which can that title gain;
The proofs of wit for ever must remain. Cowley.

Searching wits, of more mechanick parts,
Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts;
Those who to worth their bounty did extend,
And those who knew that bounty to commend. Dryden.

How vain that second life in others breath,
Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
Ease, health, and life for this they must resign;
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine!
The great man's curse without the gain endure;
Be envy'd, wretched; and be flatter'd, poor. Pope.

Nought but a genius can a genius fit;
A wit herself, Amelia weds a wit. Young.

6. Sense; judgment.

Strong was their plot,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not;
Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel.

Come, leave the loathed stage,
And this more loathsome age;
Where pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit. Ben Jonson.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.

7. Faculty of the mind.

If our wits run the wildgoose-chace, I have done;
for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakspeare.

8. [In the plural.] Soundness of understanding; intellect not crazed; sound mind.

I had a son,
Now outlaw'd from my blood; he fought my life:
The grief hath craz'd my wits. Shakspeare.
Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain? Shakspeare.

Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating; he riseth early, and his wits are with him: but the pain of watching, and choler, and pangs of the belly, are with an unsatiable man. Ecclesiasticus.

No man in his wits can make any doubt, whether there be such things as motion, and sensation, and continuity of bodies. Wilkins.

Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every sinner does more extravagant things than any man that is crazed, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

No man in his wits can seriously think that his own soul hath existed from all eternity. Bentley.

9. Contrivance; stratagem; power of expedients; invention; ingenuity.

How can it chuse but bring the simple to their wits end? how can it chuse but vex and amaze them? Hooker.

I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brainford; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me. Shakspeare.

Sleights for his wit and subtlety proceed. Milton.

The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue. L'Estrange.

WITCH. n. f. [picce, Saxon.]

1. A woman given to unlawful arts.

Wife judges have prescribed, that men may not rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor the evidence against them. For the witches themselves are imaginative; and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents to witchcraft. Bacon.

View the ruder witch, the conjurer by root, and has she not store of ignorance, and zeal of mischief? Holyday.

The night-hag comes to dance
With Lapland witches, while the lab'ring moon
Eclipses at their charms. Milton.

When I consider whether there are such persons as witches, my mind is divided: I believe in general that there is such a thing as witchcraft, but can give no credit to any particular instances of it. Spektor.

2. [from pic, Sax.] A winding sinuous bank.

Leave me those hills where harbrough nis to see;
Nor holy bush, nor briar, nor winding witch. Spenser.

To WITCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bewitch; to enchant.

Me ill befits, that in der-doing arms,
And honour's suit, my vowed days do spend,
Unto thy bounteous baits, and pleasing charms,
With which weak men thou witchest, to attend. Spenser.

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When church-yards yawn. Shakspeare.

I'll witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakspeare.

WITCHCRAFT. n. f. [witch and craft.]

1. The practices of witches.

People are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon.

2. Power more than natural.

Urania name, whose force he knew so well,
He quickly knew what witchcraft gave the blow. Sidney.

Have not some of learning and gravity thought themselves wise, in thinking witchcraft rather a mistake than a crime? Holyday.

If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in 's tongue. Shakspeare.

What subtle witchcraft man constrains
To change his pleasure into pains? Denham.

WITCHERY. n. f. [from witch.] Enchantment.

Another kind of petty witchery, if it be not altogether deceit, they call charming of beasts and birds. Raleigh.

Great Comus!
Deep skill'd in all his mother's witcheries. Milton.

WITCRACKER. n. f. [wit and cracker.]

A joker; one who breaks a jest.
A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakspeare.

WITCRAFT. n. f. [wit and craft.] Contrivance; invention. Obsolete.

He was no body that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witcraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden.

To WITE. v. a. [pitan, Sax.] To blame; to reproach.

The palmer 'gan most bitterly
Her to rebuke, for being loose and light;
Which not abiding, but more scornfully
Scoffing at him, that did her justly wite,
She turn'd her boat about. Spenser.

WITE. n. f. [from the verb.] Blame; reproach. Spenser.

WITH. preposit. [pið, Saxon.]

1. By: noting the cause.

Truth, tir'd with iteration,
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shakspeare.

With thy pow'rful blast,
Heat apace, and cool as fast. Carew.

They adhered to John, their deprived bishop;
and could not be charmed with the faintship of any second bishop, during his life. Lefley.

With ev'ry stab her bleeding heart was torn,
With wounds much harder to be seen than born. Rowe.

2. Noting the means.

Rude and unpolished are all operations of the soul in their beginnings, before they are cultivated with art and study. Dryden.

3. Noting the instrument.

Boreas through the lazy vapour flies,
And sweeps, with healthy wings, the rank polluted skies. Rowe.

By persiflations with large bellows, miners give motion to the air. Woodward.

4. On the side of; for: noting confederacy or favour.

Fear not, for I am with thee. Greiffis.

5. In opposition to; in competition or contest.

I do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever 'gainst thy valour. Shakspeare.

He shall lie with any friar in Spain. Dryden.

6. Noting comparison.

Can blazing carbuncles with her compare? Sandys.

7. In society: noting connexion.

God gave man a soul that should live for ever, although the body be destroyed; and those who were good should be with him. Stillingfleet.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou 'rt such a touchy, tefty, pleasing fellow;
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Taylor.

8. In company of.

At the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor from Rome. Shakspeare.

9. In appendage: noting consequence or concomitance.

Men might know the persons who had a right to regal power, and with it to their obedience. Locke.

10. In mutual dealing.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakspeare.

11. Noting confidence: as, I trust you with all my secrets; or, I trust all my secrets with you.

12. In partnership.

Though Jove himself no less content would be,
To part his throne and share his heaven with thee. Pope.

13. Noting connexion.

Pity your own, or pity our estate,
Nor twist our fortunes with your sinking fate. Dryden.

14. Immediately after.

With that she told me, that, though she spake of her father Cremes, she would hide no truth from me. Sidney.

With that, he crawled out of his nest,
Forth creeping on his caitiff hands and thighs. Fairy Queen.

In falling, both an equal fortune tried;
Would fortune for my fall so well provide!
With this he pointed to his face, and shew'd
His hands and all his habit smear'd with blood. Dryden.

With that the god his darling phantom calls,
And from his falt'ring lips this message falls. Garré.

15. Among.

Jasper duke of Bedford, whom the king used to employ with the first in his wars, was then sick. Bacon.

Tragedy was originally, with the antients, a piece of religious worship. Rymer.

Immortal powers the term of conscience know,
But interest is her name with men below. Dryden.

16. Upon.

Such arguments had invincible force with those pagan philosophers who became christians. Addison.

17. In consent: noting parity of state.

See where on earth the flow'ry glories lie!

With her they flourish'd, and with her they die. Pope.

18. This preposition might perhaps be exemplified in many more relations, for its use is very frequent, and therefore very lax and various. With and by it is not always easy to distinguish, nor perhaps is any distinction always observed. With seems rather to denote an instrument, and by a cause: thus, he killed his enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. The arrow is considered rather as a cause, as there is no mention of an agent. If the agent be more remote, by is used; as, the vermin which he could not kill with his gun, he killed by poison: if these two prepositions be transposed, the sentence, though equally intelligible, will be less agreeable to the common modes of speech.

19. With, in composition, signifies opposition or privation; except withal.

A present natural good may be parted with, upon a profitable expectation of a future moral good. Wilkins.

WITHAL, adv. [with and all.]

1. Along with the rest; likewise; at the same time.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hooker.

How well supplied with noble counsellors!

How modest in exception, and withal

How terrible in constant resolution! Shakspeare.

The one contains my picture, prince;

If you chuse that, then I am yours withal. Shakspeare.

This that prince did not transmit as a power, to make conquest, but as a retinue for his son; and, withal, to enable him to recover some part of Ulster. Davies.

The river being wholly of fresh water, and so large withal, chilleth the air. Heylin.

God, when he gave me strength, to shew withal how slight the gift was, hung it in my hair. Milton.

'Tis necessary men should be out of their nonage before they can attain to an actual use of this principle; and, withal, that they should be ready to exert and exercise their faculties. Wilkins.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past, 'tis done;

Perish this impious, this detested son!

Perish his fire, and perish I withal,

And let the house's heir and the hop'd kingdom fall. Dryden.

Christ had not only an infinite power to work miracles, but also an equal wisdom to know the just force and measure of every argument to persuade, and withal to look through and through all the dark corners of the soul of man, and to discern what prevails upon them, and what does not. South.

2. It is sometimes used by writers where we now use with, but I think improperly.

Time brings means to furnish him withal;
Let him but wait th' occasions as they fall. Daniel.

It is to know what God loves and delights in, and is pleased withal, and would have us do in order to our happiness. Tilloson.

We owe to christianity the discovery of the most perfect rule of life that ever the world was acquainted withal. Tilloson.

To WITHDRAW, v. a. [with and draw; from pið, or piðen, Saxon, against, and draw.]

1. To take back; to bereave.

It is not possible they should observe the one, who from the other withdraw unnecessarily obedience. Hooker.

Impossible it is that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

2. To call away; to make to retire.

Nausicaa is withdrawn, and a whole nation introduced, for a more general praise of Ulysses. Broome.

To WITHDRAW, v. n. To retire; to retreat.

She from her husband soft withdrew. Milton.

At this excess of courage all amaz'd,

The foremost of his foes awhile withdrew:

With such respect in enter'd Rome they gaz'd,

Who on high chairs the godlike fathers saw. Dryden.

Duumvir has passed the noon of life; but cannot withdraw from entertainments which are pardonable only before that stage of our being. Tatler.

WITHDRAWINGROOM, n. f. [withdraw and room.] Room behind another room, for retirement.

For an ordinary gentleman, a hall, a great parlour, with a withdrawingroom, with a kitchen, butteries, and other conveniences, is sufficient. Mortimer.

WITHE, n. f.

1. A willow twig.

An Irish rebel put up a petition, that he might be hanged in a with, and not a halter, because it had been so used with former rebels. Bacon.

There let him lie

Till I, of cup-up officers, did imply

A with, a fathome long, with which his feet

I made together in a sure league meet. Chapman.

2. A band, properly a band of twigs. [piðe signifies a band.]

These cords and wytbes will hold men's consciences, when force attends and twists them. King Charles.

Birch is of use for ox-yokes, hoops, screws, wytbes for faggots. Mortimer.

To WITHER, v. n. [gepiðenob, Saxon, dry, faded.]

1. To fade; to grow sapless; to dry up.

That which is of God we defend, to the uttermost of that ability which he hath given: that which is otherwise, let it wither even in the root from whence it hath sprung. Hooker.

When I have pluck'd thy rose,

I cannot give it vital growth again;

It needs must wither. Shakspeare.

It shall wither in all the leaves of her spring. Exekiel.

The soul may sooner leave off to subsist than to love; and, like the vine, it witthers and dies, if it has nothing to embrace. South.

2. To waste, or pine away.

Are there so many left of your own family, that you should desire wholly to reduce it, by suffering the last branch of it to wither away before its time? Temple.

3. To lose or want animal moisture.

Vain men, how vanishing a bliss we crave,
Now warm in love, now with'ring in the grave. Dryden.

To WITHER, v. a.

1. To make to fade.

The sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof falleth. James.

2. To make to shrink, decay, or wrinkle, for want of animal moisture.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale her infinite variety. Shakspeare.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm

Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up. Shakspeare.

What are these,

So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,

That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on 't? Shakspeare.

Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change

To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton.

In Spain our springs, like old men's children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy:

No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

WITHERBAND, n. f. A piece of iron which is laid under a saddle, about four fingers above the horse's withers, to keep the two pieces of wood tight that form the bow. Farrier's Dict.

WITHEREDNESS, n. f. [from withered.] The state of being withered; marci-dity.

Water them as soon as set, till they have recovered their witheredness. Mortimer.

WITHERS, n. f. Is the joining of the shoulder-bones at the bottom of the neck and mane, towards the upper part of the shoulder. Farrier's Dict.

Let the gall'd beast wince;

We are unwrung in the witthers. Shakspeare.

Rather than let your master take long journies, contrive that the saddle may pinch the beast in his witthers. Swift.

WITHERWRUNG. The hurt expressed by witherwrung sometimes is caused by a bite of a horse, or by a saddle being unfit, especially when the bows are too wide; for, when they are so, they bruise the flesh against the spines of the second and third vertebræ of the back, which forms that prominence that rises above their shoulders. Farrier's Dict.

To WITHHOLD, v. a. [with and hold.]

Withheld, or withholden, pret. and part.

Spenser has, for the sake of rhyme, very licentiously written withbault.

1. To restrain; to keep from action; to hold back.

That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger could cause at first to withhold itself, so neither have any practices, so many, so bloody, following since, been ever able to make weary. Hooker.

Sith mine he is, or free or bound;

Withhold, O sovereign prince, your hasty hand

From knitting league with him. Spenser.

The prince

Would fain have come with me to meet your grace;
And by his mother was perforce withheld. Shakspeare.

A great number of suits are for abusive words, or a box on the ear, or other trivial matters, which leave no permanent ill effects, but, if our passions may be with-held from estimating them, pass off without making us the worse, or doing us any prejudice. Kettlewell.

Be careful to withhold

Your talons from the wretched and the bold;

Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;

For, though your violence should leave them bare

Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden.

Volition is an act of the mind, knowingly exerting that dominion it takes itself to have over any part of man, by employing it in, or withholding it from, any particular action. Locke.

2. To hinder; to obstruct.

What difficulties there are which as yet with-held our assent, till we be further and better satisfied, I hope no indifferent amongst them will scorn or refuse to hear. Hooker.

3. To take away; to refuse.

Soon as Titan 'gan his head exault,

And soon again as he his light withbault,

Their wicked engines they against it bent. Spenser.

WITHHOLDEN, part. pass. of withhold.

The word keep back, sheweth that it was a thing formerly due unto God; for we cannot say that any thing is kept back, or withholden, that was not due before. Spelman.

W I T

WITHHOLD'ER. n. s. [from withhold.]

He who withholds.

WITHIN. prep. [piðinnan, Saxon.]

1. In the inner part of.

Who then shall blame
His peffer'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there? Shakspeare.

By this means, not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation of men will be bred up, within ourselves, not perverted by any other hopes. Strat.

Till this be cured by religion, it is as impossible for a man to be happy, that is, pleased and contented within himself, as it is for a sick man to be at ease.

The river is afterwards wholly lost within the waters of the lake that one discovers nothing like a stream, till within about a quarter of a mile from Geneva. Addison.

2. In the compass of; not beyond: used both of place and time.

Next day we saw, within a kenning before us, thick clouds, which put us in hope of land. Bacon.

A beet-root and a radish-root, which had all their leaves cut close to the roots, within six weeks had fair leaves. Bacon.

Most birds come to their growth within a fortnight. Bacon.

Within some while the king had taken up such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a masterpiece. Wotton.

The invention of art necessary or useful to human life, hath been within the knowledge of men. Burnet.

As to infinite space, a man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest, than he has of the least space. For in this latter, which is more within our comprehension, we are capable only of a comparative idea of smallness, which will always be less than any one whereof we have the positive idea. Locke.

This, with the green hills and naked rocks within the neighbourhood, makes the most agreeable confusion. Addison.

Bounding desires within the line which birth and fortune have marked out, is an indispensable duty.
Atterbury.

3. Not reaching to any thing external.

Were every action concluded within itself, and drew no consequences after it, we should undoubtedly never err in our choice of good. Locke.

4. Not longer ago than.

Within these five hours Hastings liv'd Untainted, unexamind, free at liberty. Shakspeare.

Within these three hours, Tullus,
Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,
And made what work I pleas'd. Shakspeare.

5. Into the reach of.

When on the brink the foaming boar I met,
The desperate savage rush'd within my force,
And bore me headlong with him down the rock. Orway.

6. In the reach of.

Secure of outward force, within himself
The danger lies, yet lies within his pow'r;
Against his will he can receive no harm. Milton.

I have suffer'd in your woe;
Nor shall be wanting aught within my pow'r
For your relief. Dryden.

Though Aurengzebe return a conqueror,
Both he and she are still within my pow'r. Dryden.

7. Into the heart or confidence of.

When by such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drive him on from one lewdness to another, no wonder if they rejoice to see him guilty of all villany. South.

8. Not exceeding.

Be informed how much your husband's revenue amounts to, and be so good a computer as to keep within it. Swift.

9. In the enclosure of.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;
But poplar wreaths around his temples spread. Addison.

W I T

Sedentary and within-door arts, and delicate manufactures, that require rather the finger than the arm, have a contrariety to a military disposition. Bacon.

WITHIN. adv.

1. In the inner parts; inwardly; internally.

This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design. Within rests more of fear,
More dread of sad event yet undecried. Daniel.

Yet sure, tho' the skin
Be clos'd without, the wound festers within. Carew.

Death thou hast seen
In his first shape on man; but many shapes
Of death, and many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave; all dismal! yet to sense
More terrible at th' entrance than within. Milton.

2. In the mind.

Language seems too low a thing to express your excellence; and our souls are speaking so much within, that they despise all foreign conversation. Dryden.

These as thy guards from outward harms are sent;
Ills from within, thy reason must prevent. Dryden.

WITHINSIDE. adv. [within and side.]

In the interior parts.

The forceps for extracting the stone is represented a little open, that the teeth may be better seen with- inside. Sharp.

WITHOUT. prep. [piðutan, Saxon.]

1. Not with.

Many there are, whose destinies have prevented their desires, and made their good motives the wards of their executors, not without miserable success. Hall.

2. In a state of absence from.

Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about
thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Tatler.

3. In the state of not having.

The virtuous bezoar is taken from the beast that feedeth upon the mountains; and that without virtue, from those that feed in the vallies. Bacon.

Infallibility and inerrableness are assumed and inclosed by the Romish church, without any inerra-ble ground to hold it on. Hammond.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; and then they will not be innate, but be derived from some other original. Locke.

4. Beyond; not within the compass of.

Eternity, before the world and after, is without our reach: but that little spot of ground that lies betwixt those two great oceans, this we are to cultivate. Burnet.

5. Supposing the negation or omission of.

Without the separation of the two monarchies, the most advantageous terms from the French must end in our destruction. Addison.

6. Not by; not by the use of; not by the help of.

Excess of diet, in costly meats and drinks fetched from beyond the seas, would be avoided: wise men will do it without a law; I would there might be a law to restrain fools. Bacon.

There is in a manner two sorts of virgin mercury;
the one running out and discovering itself without labour; the other requiring some way of extraction and separation, though not so high an one as by fire. Brown.

7. On the outside of.

Without the gate
Some drive the cars, and some the coursers rein. Dryden.

8. Not within.

When the weather hinders me from taking my diversions without doors, I frequently make a little party with select friends. Addison.

9. With exemption from.

The great lords of Ireland informed the king, that the Irishry might not be naturalized without damage to themselves or the crown. Davies.

Happiness under this view every one constantly pursues. Other things, acknowledged to be good,

W I T he can look upon without desire, pass by, and be content without. Locke.

WITHOUT. adv.

1. Not on the inside.

Forming trees and shrubs into sundry shapes, is done by moulding them within, and cutting them without. Bacon.

Wise men use studies; for they teach not their own use; but that is a wisdom without them, and above them, won by observation. Bacon.

These were from without the growing miseries. Milton.

Having gone as far as they could without, they began to observe them within. Grew.

2. Out of doors.

The reception of light into the body of the building was very prompt from without and from within. Wotton.

Their doors are barr'd against a bitter frost;
Snarl, if you please, but you shall snarl without. Dryden.

3. Externally; not in the mind.

WITHOUT. conjunct. Unless; if not;
except. Not in use, except in conversation.

I find my love shall be proved no love, without
I leave to love, being too unfit a vessel in whom to high thoughts shall be engraved. Sidney.

You will never live to my age, without you keep yourselves in breath with exercise, and in heart with joyfulness. Sidney.

WITHOUTEN. prep. [piðutan, Saxon.]

Withouten. Obsolete.

Her face so fair, as flesh it seemed not,
But heavenly portrait of bright angel's hue,
Clear as the sky, withouten blame or blot,
Through goodly mixture of complexion's dew. Spenser.

TO WITHSTAND. v. a. [with and stand.]

To gainstand; to oppose; to resist.

The violence of sorrow is not at the first to be striven withal; being, like a mighty beast, sooner tamed with following, than overthrown by with- standing. Sidney.

The wonderful zeal and fervour wherewith ye have withstood the received orders of this church, was the first thing which caused me to enter into consideration, whether every christian man, fearing God, stand bound to join with you. Hooker.

It is our frailty that in many things we all do amiss, but a virtue that we would do amiss in nothing, and a testimony of that virtue, that when we pray that what occasion of sin soever do offer itself, we may be strengthened from above to with- stand it. Hooker.

They soon set sail; nor now the fates withstand;
Their forces trusted with a foreign hand. Dryden.

When Elymas withstood Paul and Barnabas, and when Paul says of Alexander, he hath greatly with- stood our words, do we think the withstanding
there was without speaking? Atterbury.

WITHSTANDER. n. s. [from withstand.]

An opponent; resisting power.

War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and resistance being the essential parts thereof. Raleigh.

WITHWIND. n. s. [convolvulus, Latin.]

An herb.

WITHTY. n. s. [piðig, Sax.] Willow.

A tree.

WITLESS. adj. [from wit.] Wanting understanding; inconsiderate; wanting thought.

Why then should witless man so much misween
That nothing is but that which he hath seen? Spenser.

I have ever lov'd the life remov'd;
And held in idle price to haunt assemblies,
Where youth, and cost, and witless brav'ry keeps. Shakspeare.

So 't pleas'd my destiny,
Guilty of my sin of going, to think me
As vain, as witless, and as false as they Which dwell in court. Daniel.

He kept us slaves, by which we fitly prove That witless pity breedeth fruitless love. Fairfax.

The apple's outward form,
Delectable, the witless swain beguiles,
Till with a writhen mouth and spattering noise
He tastes the bitter morsel and rejects. Philips.

WITLING. n. f. [diminutive of wit.] A pretender to wit; a man of petty smartness.

You have taken off the senseless ridicule which for many years the witlings of the town have turned upon their fathers and mothers. Spectator.

Those half-learn'd witlings, num'rous in our isle
As half-form'd insects on the banks of Nile. Pope.

A beau and witling perish'd in the throng;
One died in metaphor, and one in song. Pope.

WITNESS. n. f. [pretterre, Saxon.]

1. Testimony; attestation.

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose;
An evil soul producing holy witness
Is like a villain with a smiling cheek,
A goodly apple rotten at the heart. Shakspeare.

May we, with the warrant of womanhood, and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge? Shakspeare.

If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true. John.

Many bare false witness, but their witness agreed not. Mark.

Nor was long his witness unconfirm'd. Milton.

Ye moon and stars, bear witness to the truth!
His only crime, if friendship can offend,
Is too much love to his unhappy friend. Dryden.

Our senses bear witness to the truth of each other's report, concerning the existence of sensible things. Locke.

2. One who gives testimony.

The king's attorney
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions
Of diverse witnesses. Shakspeare.

Thy trial choose
With me, best witness of thy virtue tried. Milton.

A fat benefice became a crime, and witness too against its incumbent. Decay of Piety.

Nor need I speak my deeds, for these you see;
The sun and day are witnesses for me. Dryden.

3. With a WITNESS. Effectually; to a great degree, so as to leave some lasting mark or testimony behind. A low phrase.

Here was a blessing handed out with the first pairs of animals at their creation; and it had effect with a witness. Woodward.

Now gall is bitter with a witness;
And love is all delight and sweetness. Prior.

To WITNESS. v. a. [from the noun.] To attest; to tell with asseveration.

There ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out,
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's pow'r a-foot. Shakspeare.

Though by the father he were hir'd to this,
He ne'er could witness any touch or kiss. Donne.

These be those discourses of God, whose effects those that live witness in themselves; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls. Raleigh.

To WITNESS. v. n. To bear testimony.

The sea strive with the winds which should be louder, and the shrouds of the ships, with a ghastly noise, to them that were in it witnessed that their ruin was the wager of the others contention. Sidney.

Mine eye doth his effigies witness
Most truly limn'd and living in your face. Shakspeare.

Witness, you ever-burning lights above!
You elements that clip us round about!

Witness that here Iago now doth give
The execution of his wit, hands, and heart
To Othello's service. Shakspeare.

Lorenzo
Shall witness I set forth as soon as you. Shakspeare.

I witness to
The times that brought them in. Shakspeare.

deluge in their continent, as Acolta witnesseth, and Laet, in the histories of them. Burnet.

Witness, ye heavens! I live not by my fault,
I strove to have deserv'd the death I sought. Dryden.

Lord Falkland witnesses for me, that in a book there were many subjects that I had thought on for the stage. Dryden.

Witness for me, ye awful gods!
I took not arms till urg'd by self-defence,
The eldest law of nature. Rowe.

WITNESS. interj. An exclamation signifying that person or thing may attest it.

For want of words, or lack of breath,
Witness, when I was worried with thy peals. Milton.

WITSNAPPER. n. f. [wit and snap.] One who affects repartee.

Go in, firrah; bid them prepare for dinner.—
—That is done, sir; they have all stomachs.—
—What a witsnapper are you! Shakspeare.

WITTED. adj. [from wit.] Having wit:
as, a quick witted boy.

WITTICISM. n. f. [from witty.] A mean attempt at wit. This word Dryden in-novated. 'A mighty witticism, pardon a new word.' Dryden's preface to the State of Innocence.

We have a libertine fooling even in his last agonies, with a witticism between his teeth, without any regard to sobriety and conscience. L'Estrange.

He is full of conceptions, points of epigram, and witticisms, all which are below the dignity of heroick verse. Addison.

WITTIPLY. adv. [from witty.]

1. Ingeniously; cunningly; artfully.

But is there any other beast that lives,
Who his own harm so wittily contrives? Dryden.

2. With flight of imagination.

In conversation wittily pleasant, pleasantly game-some. Sidney.

The old hermit, that never saw pen and ink, very wittily said to a niece of king Gordobuck, that that is, is. Shakspeare.

Obstinate contemners of all helps and arts, such as, presuming on their natural parts, dare deride all diligence, and seem to mock at the terms when they understand not the things, think that way to get off wittily with their ignorance. Ben Jonson.

WITTINESS. n. f. [from witty.] The quality of being witty.

No less deserveth his wittiness in devising, his pithiness in uttering, his pastoral rudeness, and his moral wisdom. Spenser.

WITTINGLY. adv. [from witting, knowing; pitān, Saxon, to weet or know.]

Knowingly; not ignorantly; with knowledge; by design.

Whatsoever we work as men, the same we do wittingly work and freely; neither are we, according to the manner of natural agents, any way so tied, but that it is in our power to leave things we do undone. Hooker.

Withhold revenge, 'tis not my fault,
Nor wittingly have I infring'd my vow. Shakspeare.

During that dreadful siege, every particular accident for brevity I wittingly pass over. Knolles.

He knowingly and wittingly brought evil into the world. Mare.

No forger of lies willingly and wittingly furnished out the means of his own detection. West.

WITTOL. n. f. [pitōl, Saxon, from pitān, to know.] A man who knows the falsehood of his wife, and seems contented; a tame cuckold.

O Mars, for what doth serve thy armed ax?
To let that wittol beast consume in flames
Thy Venus child. Sidney.

Amaimon sounds well; Lucifer well; yet they are the names of fiends; but cuckold, wittol, the devil himself hath not such a name. Shakspeare.

The Theban wittol, when he once descries
Jove is his rival, falls to sacrifice. Cleaveland.

WITTOLLY. adj. [from wittol.] Cuckoldly.

The jealous wittolly knave hath masses of money. Shakspeare.

WITTY. adj. [from wit.]

1. Judicious; ingenious; inventive.

No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels. Shakspeare.

Thou art beautiful in thy countenance, and witty
in thy words. Judith.

2. Full of imagination.

Histories make men wise, poets witty, the mathematick subtle. Bacon.

Where there is a real stock of wit, yet the wittiest sayings will be found in a great measure the issues of chance. South.

In gentle verse the witty told their flame,
And grac'd their choicest songs with Emma's name. Prior.

3. Sarcastick; full of taunts.

Honeycomb, who was so unmercifully witty upon the women, has given the ladies ample satisfaction by marrying a farmer's daughter. Spectator.

WITWAL. n. f. [wireo, Lat.] A bird. Ainsworth.

WITWORM. n. f. [wit and worm.] One that feeds on wit; a canker of wit.

Thus to come forth so suddenly a witworm. Ben Jonson.

To WIVE. v. n. [from wife.] To marry;
to take a wife.

Were she as rough
As are the swelling Adriatick seas,
I come to wive it wealthily in Padua. Shakspeare.

The ancient saying is no heresy,
Hanging and wiving goes by destiny. Shakspeare.

A shop of all qualities that man loves woman for;
besides that hook of wiving, fairness, which strikes
the eye. Shakspeare.

Design or chance makes others wive,
But nature did this match contrive. Waller.

To WIVE. v. a.

1. To match to a wife.

She dying gave it me;
And bid me, when my fate would have me wiv'd,
To give it her. Shakspeare.

2. To take for a wife.

If he have the condition of a saint, and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should thrive me than wive me. Shakspeare.

WIVELY. adv. [from wives.] It were written more analogically wisely, that is, wife-like.] Belonging to a wife.

Basilus could not abstain from praising Parthenia, as the perfect picture of a womanly virtue, and wively faithfulness. Sidney.

WIVES. n. f. The plural of wife.

A man of his learning should not so lightly have been carried away with old wives tales, from approvement of his own reason. Spenser.

WIZARD. n. f. [from wife.] A conjurer;
an inchanter; a he witch. It had probably at first a laudable meaning.

Patience, good lady; wizards know their times. Shakspeare.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams,
And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherited should be. Shakspeare.

That damn'd wizard, hid in sly disguise,
For so by certain signs I knew, had met Already, ere my best speed could prevent,
The aidless innocent lady, his wish'd prey. Milton.

The prophecies of wizards old Increas'd her terror, and her fall foretold. Waller.

The wily wizard must be caught,
For, unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for nought. Dryden.

WO. n. f. [pa, Saxon.]

1. Grief; sorrow; misery; calamity.

W O F

The king is mad : how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows ! better I were distract ;
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs ;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakspeare.
So many miseries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe-weary'd tongue is still. Shakspeare.
Her rash hand in evil hour
Forth reaching to the fruit, Eve pluck'd, she eat :
Earth felt the wound ; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton.
O'er dreary wastes they weep each other's woe.
Pope.

2. It is often used in denunciations, wo be ;
or in exclamations of sorrow, wo is ; anciently wo wurth ; pa pupð, Saxon.

All is but lip wisdom which wants experience : I now, wo is me, do try what love can do. Sidney.
Wo is my heart ;

That poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whose rags sham'd gilded arms, whose naked breast
Stept before shields of proof, cannot be found. Shakspeare.

Many of our princes, woe the while !
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood. Shakspeare.

Happy are they which have been my friends ; and woe to my lord chief-justice. Shakspeare.

Howl ye, wo wurth the day. Ezekiel.
Wo be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves. Ezekiel.

Wo is me for my hurt, my wound is grievous.
Jeremiah.

He took and laid it by, and wept for wo.
Chapman.

If God be such a being as I have described, wo to the world if it were without him : this would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind than the extinguishing of the sun. Tillotson.

Woe to the vanquish'd, woe ! Dryden.

3. A denunciation of calamity ; a curse.

Can there be a wo or curse in all the stores of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice, of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one confusion ? South.

4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive, and in exclamation an adjective ; as particularly in the following lines, which seem improper and ungrammatical :

Woe are we, sir ! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out, Shakspeare.

WOAD. n. f. [pad, Sax. glafsum, Lat.] A plant cultivated for the dyes, who use it for the foundation of many colours. Miller.

In times of old, when British nymphs were known
To love no foreign fashions like their own ;
When drefs was monstrous, and fig-leaves the mode,
And quality put on no paint but woad. Garth.

WO'BEGONE. adj. [wo and begone.] Lost in wo ; distracted in wo ; overwhelmed with sorrow.

Such a man,
So dull, so dead in look, so woebegone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him half his Troy was burn'd ;
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue. Shakspeare.

Who so woebegone
For Ochy, as the isle of ancient Avalon ? Drayton.
Tauced he saw his life's joy set at nought,
So woebegone was he with pains of love. Fairfax.

WOFT. The obsolete participle passive from
To waft.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits
Than now the English bottoms have woft,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakspeare.

WO'FUL. adj. [wo and full.]

1. Sorrowful ; afflicted ; mourning.
The woful Gynecia, to whom rest was no ease, had left her loathed lodging, and gotten herself into the solitary places those deserts were full of. Sidney.

W O L

How many woful widows left to bow
To sad disgrace ! Daniel.

In a tow'r, and never to be loos'd,
The woful captive kinsmen are inclos'd. Dryden.

2. Calamitous ; afflictive.

Willful extravagance ends in woful want.

O woful day ! O day of woe ! Proverbs.

O woful day ! O day of woe ! Philips

3. Wretched ; paltry ; sorry.

What woful stuff this madrigal would be,
In some starv'd hackney-sonneteer, or me ?
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens ! how the style refines !
Pope.

WO'FULLY. adv. [from woful.]

1. Sorrowfully ; mournfully.

2. Wretchedly : in a sense of contempt.

He who would pass such a judgment upon his condition, as shall be confirmed at that great tribunal, from which there lies no appeal, will find himself wofully deceived, if he judges of his spiritual estate by any of these measures. South.

WO'FULNESS. n. f. [from woful.] Misery ;
calamity.

WOLD. n. f. Wold, whether singly or jointly, in the names of places, signifies a plain open country ; from the Saxon polb, a plain and a place without wood. Gibson.

Wold and wald with the Saxons signified a ruler or governour ; from whence bertwold is a famous governour ; aethelwold a noble governour ; berwald, and by inversion waldber, a general of an army. Gibson.

WOLF. [palp, Saxon ; wolf, Dutch.]

1. A kind of wild dog that devours sheep :
thence any thing ravenous or destructive.

Advance our waving colours on the walls,
Rescued is Orleans from the English wolves.
Shakspeare.

No, rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl, Necessity's sharp pinch. Shakspeare.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruel's else subscrib'd. Shakspeare.

2. An eating ulcer.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use meta-phorical expressions, and what absurd conceits the vulgar will swallow in the literals, an example we have in our profession, who having called an eating ulcer by the name of wolf, common apprehension conceives a reality therein. Brown.

WO'LFDOG. n. f. [wolf and dog.]

1. A dog of a very large breed kept to guard sheep.

The luckless prey how treach'rous tumblers gain,
And dauntless wolfdogs shake the lion's mane. Tickel.

2. A dog supposed to be bred between a dog and wolf.

WO'LFISH. adj. [from wolf.] Resembling a wolf in qualities or form.

stances, while they work, which may make them
fume and inflame less. Bacon.

Try the force of imagination upon staying the working of beer, when the barm is put in. Bacon.

If in the wort of beer, while it worketh, before it be tunned, the burrage be often changed with fresh,
it will make a sovereign drink for melancholy. Bacon.

6. To operate; to have effect.

With some other business put the king
From these sad thoughts that work too much upon him. Shakspeare.

All things work together for good to them that love God. Romans.

Gravity worketh weakly, both far from the earth, and also within the earth. Bacon.

Although the same tribute laid by consent, or by imposing, be all one to the purse, yet it works diversely on the courage: no people overcharged with tribute is fit for empire. Bacon.

These positive undertakings wrought upon many to think that this opportunity should not be lost. Clarendon.

Nor number nor example with him wrought
To swerve from truth, or change his constant mind. Milton.

We see the workings of gratitude in the Israelites. South.

Would work too fiercely on the giddy crowd. Dryden.

Poison will work against the stars: beware,
For ev'ry meal an antidote prepare. Dryden, jun.

When this reverence begins to work in him, next consider his temper of mind. Locke.

This so wrought upon the child, that afterwards
he desired to be taught. Locke.

Humours and manners work more in the meaner sort than with the nobility. Addison.

The ibibaboca is a foot round, and three yards and a half long; his colours are white, black, and red: of all serpents his bite is the most pernicious, yet worketh the slowest. Grew.

7. To obtain by diligence.

Without the king's assent
You wrought to be a legate. Shakspeare.

8. To act internally; to operate as a purge, or other physick.

Work on,

My medicine, work! thus credulous fools are caught. Shakspeare.

I should have doubted the operations of antimony, where such a potion could not work. Brown.

It is benign, nor far from the nature of aliment, into which, upon defect of working, it is oft times converted. Brown.

Most purges heat a little; and all of them work best, that is, cause the blood so to do, as do fermenting liquors, in warm weather, or in a warm room. Grew.

9. To act as on a subject.

Let it be pain of body or distress of mind, there's matter yet left for philosophy and constancy to work upon. L'Estrange.

Natural philosophy has sensible objects to work upon; but then it often puzzles the reader with the intricacy of its notions. Addison.

The predictions Bickerstaff published, relating to his death, too much affected and worked on his imagination. Swift.

10. To make way.

Body shall up to spirit work. Milton.
Who would trust chance, since all men have the seeds

Of good and ill, which should work upward first? Dryden.

11. To be tossed or agitated.

Vex'd by wintry storms, Benacus raves, Confus'd with working sands and rolling waves. Addison.

To WORK, v. a. pret. and part. passive worked or wrought.

1. To labour; to manufacture; to form by labour.

He could have told them of two or three gold mines, and a silver mine, and given the reason why they forbore to work them at that time, and when they left off from working them. Raleigh.

The chaos, by the Divine power, was wrought from one form into another, till it settled into a habitable earth. Burnet.

This mint is to work off part of the metals found in the neighbouring mountains. Addison.

The young men acknowledged in love-letters, sealed with a particular wax, with certain enchanting words wrought upon the seals, that they died for her. Tatler.

They now begin to work the wondrous frame,
To shape the parts, and raise the vital flame. Blackmore.

The industry of the people works up all their native commodities to the last degree of manufacture. Swift.

2. To bring by action into any state.

So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
Of rushing torrents and descending rains,
Works itself clear, and, as it runs, refines,
Till by degrees the floating mirror shines. Addison.

3. To influence by successive impulses.

If you would work any man, know his nature and fashions, and so lead him. Bacon.

To hasten his destruction, come yourself,
And work your royal father to his ruin. A. Philips.

4. To make by gradual labour, or continued violence.

Sidelong he works his way. Milton.
Through winds, and waves, and storms, he works
his way,

Impatient for the battle: one day more
Will set the victor thundering at our gates. Addison.

5. To produce by labour; to effect.

Fly the dreadful war,
That in thyself thy lesser parts do move,
Outrageous anger, and woe-working jar. Spenser.

Our light affliction for a moment worketh for us a far more eternal weight of glory. 2 Corinthians.

We might work any effect, not holpen by the co-operation of spirits, but only by the unity of nature. Bacon.

Moisture, although it doth not pass through bodies without communication of some substance, as heat and cold do, yet it worketh effects by qualifying of the heat and cold. Bacon.

Such power, being above all that the understanding of man can conceive, may well work such wonders. Drummond.

God, only wise, to punish pride of wit,
Among men's wits hath this confusion wrought;
As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds did hit,
By tongues confusion was to ruin brought. Davies.
Of the tree,
Which, tasted, works knowledge of good and evil,
Thou may'st not: in the day thou eat'st, thou diest. Milton.

Each herb he knew that works or good or ill,
More learn'd than Meve, half as learn'd as Hill. Harte.

6. To manage in a state of motion; to put into motion.

Mere personal valour could not supply want of knowledge in building and working ships. Arbuth.

7. To put to labour; to exert.

Now, Marcus, thy virtue's on the proof;
Put forth thy utmost strength, work every nerve,
And call up all thy father in thy soul. Addison.

8. To embroider with a needle: as, she worked an apron.

I worked a violet leaf. Spektator.
9. To WORK out. To effect by toil.

Not only every society, but every single person, has enough to do to work out his own salvation. Decay of Piety.

The mind takes the hint from the poet, and works out the rest by the strength of her own faculties. Addison.

10. To WORK out. To erase; to efface.

Tears of joy, for your returning spilt,
Work out and expiate our former guilt. Dryden.

11. To WORK up. To raise.

That which is wanting to work up the pity to a greater height, was not afforded me by the story. Dryden.

This lake resembles a sea when worked up by storms. Addison.

The sun, that rolls his chariot o'er their heads,
Works up more fire and colour in their cheeks. Addison.

We should inure ourselves to such thoughts, till they have worked up our souls into filial awe and love of him. Atterbury.

12. To WORK up. To expend in any work, as materials.

WORK. n. s. [people, Sax. werk, Dutch.]

1. Toil; labour; employment.

Bread, correction, and work for a servant. Ecclesiasticus.

In the bottom of some mines in Germany there grow vegetables, which the work-folks say have magical virtue. Bacon.

The ground, unbid, gives more than we can ask;
But work is pleasure, when we chuse our task. Dry.

2. A state of labour.

All the world is perpetually at work, only that our poor mortal lives should pass the happier for that little time we possess them, or else end the better when we lose them: upon this occasion riches came to be coveted, honours esteemed, friendship pursued, and virtues admired. Temple.

3. Bungling attempt.

It is pleasant to see what work our adversaries make with this innocent canon: sometimes 'tis a mere forgery of hereticks, and sometimes the bishops that met there were not so wise as they should have been. Stillingfleet.

4. Flowers or embroidery of the needle.

Round her work she did empale
With a fair border wrought of sundry flowers,
Inwoven with an ivy-winding trail. Spenser.

That handkerchief you gave me: I must take out the work: a likely piece of work, that you should find it in your chamber, and know not who left it there. This is some minx's token, and I must take out the work? There, give it your hobbyhorse: whosoever you had it, I'll take out no work on't. Shakspeare.

Flavia is very idle, and yet very fond of fine work: this makes her often sit working in bed until noon. Law.

5. Any fabrick or compages of art.

Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.

6. Action; feat: deed.

The instrumentality of riches to works of charity, has rendered it necessary in every christian commonwealth by laws to secure propriety. Flamm.
Nothing lovelier can be found in woman,
Than good works in her husband to promote. Milt.
Not in the works of bloody Mars employ'd,
The wanton youth inglorious peace enjoy'd. Pope.

7. Any thing made.

Where is that holy fire, which verse is said
To have? Is that enchanting force decay'd?
Verse, that draws nature's works from nature's law,
Thee, her best work, to her work cannot draw. Donne.

O fairest of creation! last and best
Of all God's works! creature in whom excels
Whatever can to fight or thought be form'd;
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet,
How art thou lost! Milton.

8. Operation.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixt bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intire application of the agents, water hath the principality and excess over earth. Digby.

9. Effect; consequence of agency.

Fancy
Wild work produces oft and most in dreams. Milt.

10. Management; treatment.

Let him alone; I'll go another way to work with
him. Shakspeare.

gage.

It setteth those wits on work in better things, which would be else employed in worse. Hooker.

Wo'RKER. n. s. [from work.] One that works.

Ye fair nymphs, which oftentimes have lov'd
The cruel worker of your kindly smarts, Prepare yourselves, and open wide your hearts. Spens.

His father was a worker in brags. 1 Kings.

You spoke me fair, but betrayed me: depart from me, you professors of holiness, but workers of iniquity. South.

Wo'RKFELLOW. n. s. [work and fellow.]

One engaged in the same work with another.

Timotheus, my workfellow, and Lucius, salute
you. Romans.

Wo'RKHOUSE. } n. s. [from work and Wo'RKINGHOUSE. } house.]

1. A place in which any manufacture is carried on.

The quick forge and workinghouse of thought. Shakspeare.

Protagenes had his workhouse in a garden out of town, where he was daily finishing those pieces he began. Dryden.

2. A place where idlers and vagabonds are condemned to labour.

Hast thou suffered at any time by vagabonds and pilferers? Esteem and promote those useful charities which remove such pests into prisons and work- houses. Atterbury.

Wo'RKINGDAY. n. s. [work and day.]

Day on which labour is permitted; not the sabbath: it therefore is taken for coarse and common.

How full of briars is this workingday world!
Shakspeare.

Will you have me, lady? —

—No, my lord, unless I might have another for workingdays; your grace is too costly to wear every day. Shakspeare.

Wo'RKMAN. n. s. [work and man.] An artificer; a maker of any thing.

When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness. Shaks.
If prudence works, who is a more cunning work- man? Wisd.

There was no other cause preceding than his own will, no other matter than his own power, no other workman than his own word, and no other consideration than his own infinite goodness. Raleigh.

They have inscribed the pedestal, to shew their value for the workman. Addison.

Wo'RKMANLY. adj. [from workman.]

Skilful; well performed; workman-like.

Wo'RKMANLY. adv. Skilfully; in a manner becoming a workman.

In having but fortie foot workmanly dight,
Take saffron enough for a lord and a knight. Tusser.
We will fetch thee straight

Daphne roaming through a thorny wood,
Scratching her legs, that one shall swear she bleeds,
And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,
So workmanly the blood and tears are drawn. Shaks.

Wo'RKMANSHIP. n. s. [from workman.]

1. Manufacture; something made by any one.

Nor any skill'd in workmanship emboss'd,
Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine,
Might in their divers cunning ever dare
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

By how much Adam exceeded all men in perfection, by being the immediate workmanship of God, by so much did that chosen garden exceed all parts of the world. Raleigh.

He moulded him to his own idea, delighting in the choice of the materials; and afterwards, as great architects used to do, in the workmanship of his regal hand. Wotton.

What more reasonable than to think, that if we be God's workmanship, he shall set this mark of himself upon all reasonable creatures? Tillotson.

2. The skill of a worker; the degree of skill discovered in any manufacture.

The Tritonian goddess having heard
Her blazed fame, which all the world had fill'd,
Came down to prove the truth, and due reward

For her praise-worthy workmanship to yield. Spens.

The wand'ring streams in whose entrancing gyres
Wise Nature oft herself her workmanship admires. Drayton.

3. The art of working.

If there were no metals, 'tis a mystery to me how Tubalcain could ever have taught the workmanship and use of them. Woodward.

Wo'RKMASTER. n. s. [work and master.]
The performer of any work.

What time this world's great workmaster did cast
To make all things, such as we now behold,

It seems that he before his eyes had plac'd
A goodly pattern, to whose perfect mould
He fashion'd them so comely. Spenser.

Every carpenter and workmaster that laboreth. Ecclesiasticus.

Desire, which tends to know
The works of God, thereby to glorify

The great workmaster leads to no excess. Milton.

Wo'RKWOMAN. n. s. [work and woman.]

He the world
Built on circumfluous waters. Milton.

Ferdinand Magellanus was the first that compassed
the whole world. Heylin.

4. Present state of existence.

I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good sometime Accounted dangerous folly. Shakspeare.

The making of a will is generally an easy task, as being at once a double parting with the world. Fell.
I was not come into the world then. L'Estr.
He wittingly brought evil into the world. Morre.
Christian fortitude consists in suffering, for the love of God, whatever hardships can befall in the world. Dryden.

5. A secular life.

Happy is she that from the world retires,
And carries with her what the world admires;
Thrice happy she, whose young thoughts fixt above,
While she is lovely does to heav'n make love:
I need not urge your promise, ere you find An entrance here, to leave the world behind. Waller.
By the world, we sometimes understand the things of this world; the variety of pleasures and interests which steal away our affections from God. Sometimes we are to understand the men of the world, with whose solicitations we are so apt to comply. Rogers.

6. Publick life; the publick.

Why dost thou shew me thus to th' world?
Bear me to prison. Shakspeare.
Hence banish'd, is banish'd from the world;
And world-exil'd is death. Shakspeare.

7. Business of life; trouble of life.

Here I'll set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of man's suspicious fears
From this world-wearied flesh. Shakspeare.

8. Great multitude.

You a world of curses undergo,
Being the agents, or base second means. Shakspeare.
Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company;
For you in my respect are all the world. Shakspeare.
I leave to speak of a world of other attempts furnished by kings. Raleigh.
Garments richly woven
And worlds of prize. Chapman.
In double fistic fable barks: with him a world of men
Most strong and full of valour went. Chapman.
What a world of contradictions would follow upon the contrary opinion, and what a world of confusions upon the contrary practice! Bishop Sanderson.
Just so romances are, for what else
Is in them all but love and battles?
O' th' first of these we have no great matter
To treat of, but a world o' th' latter. Hudibras.
It brought into this world a world of woe. Milton.
There were a world of paintings, and among the rest the picture of a lion. L'Estrange.
Marriage draws a world of business on our hands, subjects us to law-suits, and loads us with domestick cares. Dryden.
From thy corporeal prison freed,
Soon hast thou reach'd the goal with mended pace;
A world of woes dispatch'd in little space. Dryden.
Why will you fight against so sweet a passion,
And steel your heart to such a world of charms?
Addison.

9. Mankind; a hyperbolical expression for many: all the world is a favourite phrase, in French, for many.

This hath bred high terms of separation between such and the rest of the world, whereby the one sort are named the brethren, the godly; the other, worldlings, time-servers, pleasers of men more than of God. Hooker.
'Tis the duke's pleasure,
Whose disposition, all the world well knows,
Will not be rubb'd nor stopp'd. Shakspeare.
Thus the world may see what 'tis to innovate!
Drayton.

He was willing to declare to all the world, that, as he had been brought up in that religion established in the church of England; so he could maintain the same by unanswerable reasons. Clarendon.
We turn them over to the study of beauty and dress, and the whole world conspires to make them think of nothing else. Law.

10. Course of life.

Persons of conscience will be afraid to begin the world unjustly. Clarissa.

11. Universal empire.

Rome was to sway the world. Milton.
This through the east just vengeance hurl'd,
Love lost poor Antony the world. Prior.

12. The manners of men the practice of life.

Children should not know any wickedness. Old folks have discretion, and know the world. Shakspeare.
What, start at this! when sixty years have spread Their grey experience o'er thy hoary head?
Is this the all observing age could gain?
Or hast thou known the world so long in vain?
Dryden.

If knowledge of the world makes man perfidious,
May Juba ever live in ignorance. Addison.
The girl might pass, if we could get her
To know the world a little better;
To know the world! a modern phrase
For visits, ombre, balls, and plays. Swift.

13. Every thing that the world contains.

Had I now a thousand worlds, I would give them all for one year more, that I might present to God one year of such devotion and good works, as I never before so much as intended. Law.

14. A large tract of country; a wide compass of things.

'Tis I who love's Columbus am, 'tis I
That must new worlds in it descry. Cowley.

15. A collection of wonders; a wonder. Obsolete.

The bassa having recommended Barbarossa, it was a world to see, how the court was changed upon him. Knolles.

16. Time. A sense originally Saxon; now only used in World without end.

17. In the world. In possibility.

All the precautions in the world were taken for the marriage of his younger brother. Addison.

18. For all the world. Exactly. A ludicrous sense, now little used.

He had a pair of horns like a bull, his feet cloven, as many eyes upon his body as my grey mare hath dapples, and for all the world so placed. Sidney.

Wo'RLDLINESS. n. s. [from worldly.] Covetousness; addictedness to gain.

Wo'RLDLING. n. s. [from world.] A mortal set upon profit.

Base minded wretches! are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain to let so much time pass? Sid.
The one sort are named the brethren, the godly; the other worldlings, time-servers, and pleasers of men more than pleasers of God. Hooker.
God of the world and worldlings,
Great Mammon! greatest god below the sky. Spens.
For his weeping in the needle's stream;
Poor dear, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Shakspeare.
That other on his friends his thoughts bestows:
The covetous worldling, in his anxious mind,
Thinks only on the wealth he left behind. Dryden.
If we consider the expectations of futurity, the worldling gives up the argument. Rogers.

Wo'RLDLY. adj. [from world.]

1. Secular; relating to this life, in contradistinction to the life to come.
He is divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly suits would he be moved,
To draw him from his holy exercise. Shakspeare.
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command?
Shakspeare.
The fortitude of a christian consists in patience; not in enterprizes which the poets call heroic, and which are commonly the effects of interest, pride, and worldly honour. Dryden.
Compare the happiness of men and beasts no farther than it results from worldly advantages. Atterbury.
As to worldly affairs, which my friends thought so heavy upon me, they are most of them of our own making, and fall away as soon as we know ourselves. Law.

2. Bent upon this world; not attentive to a future state.

They'll practise how to live secure,
Worldly or dissolute, on that their lords
Shall leave them to enjoy. Milton.

3. Human; common; belonging to the world.

Many years it hath continued, standing by no other worldly mean but that one only hand which erected it. Hooker.

Times and places are approved witnesses of worldly actions. Raleigh.

Wo'RLDLY. adv. [from world.] With relation to the present life.

It is a token of a worldly wise man, not to contend in vain against the nature of times wherein he liveth. Raleigh.

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise
By simply meek. Milton.

This cannot be done, if my will be worldly or voluptuously disposed. South.

Since your mind is worldly bent,
Therefore of the two gifts in my dispose,
Think ere you speak, I grant you leave to choose. Dryden.

WORM. n. s. [pyrm, Sax. worm, Dutch; vermis, Latin.]

1. A small harmless serpent that lives in the earth.

Both the princes
Thy broken faith hath made a prey to worms. Shakspeare.

Help me into some house,
Or I shall faint! A plague o' both your houses!
They have made worms meat of me. Shakspeare.
Though worms devour me, though I turn to mold,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold:
I from my marble monument shall rise
Again intire, and see him with these eyes. Sandys.
At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect or worm. Milton.

2. A poisonous serpent.

The mortal worm. Shakspeare.

3. Animal bred in the body.

Physicians observe these worms engendered within the body of man. Harvey.

4. The animal that spins silk; filkworm.

Thou owest the worm no silk, the sheep no wool. Shakspeare.

5. Grubs that gnaw wood and furniture.

'Tis no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd. Shakspeare.

6. Something tormenting.

The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul. Shakspeare.

The chains of darkness, and th' undying worm. Milton.

7. Any thing vermiculated, or turned round; any thing spiral.

The threads of screws, when bigger than can be made in screw-plates, are called worms. The length of a worm begins at the one end of the spindle, and ends at the other; the breadth of the worm is contained between any two grooves on the spindle; the depth of the worm is cut into the diameter of the spindle, viz. the depth between the outside of the worm, and the bottom of the groove. Moxon.

To WORM. v. n. [from the noun.] To work slowly, secretly, and gradually.

When debates and fretting jealousy
Did worm and work within you more and more,
Your colour faded. Herbert.

To WORM. v. a.

1. To drive by slow and secret means, perhaps as by a screw.

They find themselves wormed out of all power, by a new spawn of independents, sprung from your own bowels. Swift.

2. To deprive a dog of something, nobody knows what, under his tongue, which is said to prevent him, nobody knows why, from running mad.

Every one that keepeth a dog, should have him wormed. Mortimer.

Wo'RMEATEN. [worm and eaten.]

1. Gnawed by worms.

For his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a wormeaten nut. Shakspeare.

2. Old; worthless.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls,
And old records from antient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment
scrolls,
That were all wormeaten, and full of canker holes.

Things among the Greeks, which antiquity had worn out of knowledge, were called ogygia, which we call wormeaten, or of defaced date.

Thine's like wormeaten trunks cloath'd in seal's skin;

Or grave, that's dust without, and stink within.

WO'RMWOOD. n. f. [from its virtue to kill worms in the body; perhaps properly wormwort.] A plant.

Wormwood hath an indeterminate stalk, branching out into many small shoots, with spikes of naked flowers hanging downward; the leaves are hoary and bitter. Of this plant there are thirty-two species, one of which, the common wormwood, grows in the roads; but it is also planted in gardens for common use. Great variety of sea wormwoods are found in the salt marshes of England, and sold in the markets for the true Roman wormwood, though they differ greatly.

She was wean'd; I had then laid Wormwood to my dug.

Pituitous cacochymia must be corrected by bitters,
as wormwood wine.

I ask whether one be not invincibly conscious to himself of a different perception, when he actually tastes wormwood, or only thinks on that favour?

WO'RMY. adj. [from worm.] Full of worms.

Spirits that in crossways and floods have burial,
Already to their wormy beds are gone.

Yet can I not persuade me thou art dead,
Or that thy corse corrupts in earth's dark womb,
Or that thy beauties lie in wormy bed.

WORN. part. pass. of wear. Worn out is quite consumed.

His is a maiden shield,
Guileless in fight: mine batter'd, hew'd, and bor'd,
Worn out of service, must forsake his lord.

What I now offer, is the wretched remainder of a sickly age, worn out with study, and oppress'd by fortune.

The greatest part of mankind are given up to labour, whose lives are worn out only in the provisions for living.

Your cold hypocrisy's a stale device,
A worn-out trick; wouldst thou be thought in earnest,

Cloath thy feign'd zeal in rage, in fire, in fury.

WO'RNIL. n. f.

In the backs of cows, in the summer, are maggots generated, which in Essex we call wornils, being first only a small knot in the skin.

To WO'RRY. v. a. [from worren, Sax. whence perhaps the word warray.]

1. To tear, or mangle, as a beast tears its prey.

If we, with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried.

The fury of the tumults might fly so high as to worry and tear those in pieces, whom as yet they but played with in their paws.

'Tis no new thing for the dogs that are to keep the wolves from worrying the sheep, to be delivered up to the enemy, for fear the sheep should worry the wolves.

This revives and imitates that inhuman barbarity of the old heathen persecutors, wrapping up christians in the skins of wild beasts, that so they might be worried and torn in pieces by dogs.

2. To harass, or persecute brutally.

Then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries he his daughter with clipping her.

For want of words, or lack of breath,
Witness when I was worried with thy peals.

It has pleased Providence at length to give us righteousness instead of exaction, and hopes of religion to a church worried with reformation.

All his care
Was to preserve me from the barbarous rage,
Which worried him only for being mine. Southern.
I shall not suffer him to worry any man's reputation, nor indeed fall on any person whatsoever.

Let them rail,
And worry one another at their pleasure.

Madam, contrive and invent,
And worry him out, till he gives his consent.

WORSE. adj. The comparative of bad: bad, worse, worst. [from pyr, Saxon.] More bad; more ill.

Why should he see your faces worse liking than the children of your sort?

In happiness and misery, the question still remains, how men come often to prefer the worse to the better, and to chuse that, which, by their own confession, has made them miserable?

WORSE. adv. In a manner more bad.

The more one sickens, the worse at ease he is.

The WORSE. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The loss; not the advantage; not the better.

Was never man, who most conquests achiev'd,
But sometimes had the worse, and lost by war.

Judah was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled to their tents.

2. Something less good.

A man, whatever are his professions, always thinks the worse of a woman, who forgives him for making an attempt on her virtue.

To WORSE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To put to disadvantage. This word, though analogical enough, is not now used.

Perhaps more valid arms,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes.

WO'RSE. adj. A barbarous word, formed by corrupting worse with the usual comparative termination.

Gods! take my breath from me;
Let not my worse spirit tempt me again
To die before you please.

A dreadful quiet felt, and, worse far
Than arms, a sullen interval of war.

WO'RSHIP. n. f. [from weorðscype, Saxon.]

1. Dignity; eminence; excellence.

Elfin born of noble state,
And muckle worship in his native land,
Well could he tourney, and in lists debate.

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know;
And in the most exact regard support
The worship of their names.

Thou madest him lower than the angels, to crown him with glory and worship.

2. A character of honour.

I belong to worship, and affect
In honour, honesty.

3. A title of honour.

Dinner is on table; my father desires your wor-ship's company.

Th' old Romans freedom did bestow,
Our princes worship, with a blow.

What lands and lordships for their owner know
My quondam barber, but his worship now.

4. A term of ironical respect.

Against your worship when had S—k writ?
Or P—ge pour'd forth the torrent of his wit?

5. Adoration; religious act of reverence.

They join their vocal worship to the quire
Of creatures wanting voice.

Under the name of church, I understand a body or collection of human persons professing faith in Christ, gathering together in several places of the world for the worship of the same God, and united into the same corporation.

He wav'd a torch aloft, and madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train.

The worship of God is an eminent part of religion, and prayer is a chief part of religious worship; hence religion is described by seeking God.

There was a voyage of the Egyptians under Osiris up the Danube; from them the Suevi had their worship of Isis.

6. Honour; respect; civil deference.

The humble guest shall have worship in the presence of those who sit at meat with him.

Since God hath appointed government among men, it is plain that his intention was, that some kind of worship should be given from some to others; for where there is a power to punish and reward, there is a foundation of worship in those who are under that power; which worship lies in expressing a due regard to that power, by a care not to provoke it, and an endeavour to obtain the favour of it; which,
among mankind, is called civil worship.

7. Idolatry of lovers; submissive respect.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.

To WO'RSHIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adore; to honour or venerate with religious rites.

Thou shalt worship no other God.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels.

The law of nature teacheth, that the true and living God ought to be worshipped, and that a sufficient and convenient time is to be set apart for the same.

Adore and worship God supreme.

First worship God; he that forgets to pray,
Bids not himself good-morrow nor good-day.

On the smooth rind the passenger shall see Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree.

2. To respect; to honour; to treat with civil reverence.

Our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a waken epitaph.

3. To honour with amorous respect.

With bended knees I daily worship her,
Yet she consumes her own idolater.

To WO'RSHIP. v. n. To perform acts of adoration.

The people went to worship before the golden calf.

WO'RSHIPFUL. adj. [from worship and full.]

1. Claiming respect by any character or dignity.

This is worshipful society,
And fits the mounting spirit like myself.

When old age comes upon him, it comes alone, bringing no other evil with it; but when it comes to wait upon a great and worshipful sinner, who for many years has ate well and done ill, it is attended with a long train of rheums.

2. A term of ironical respect.

Every man would think me an hypocrite; and what excites your most worshipful thought to think so?

Suppose this worshipful idol be made, yet still it wants sense and motion.

WO'RSHIPFULLY. adv. [from worshipful.] Respectfully.

Hastings will lose his head ere give consent
His master's son, as worshipfully he terms it, Shall lose the royalty of England's throne.

WO'RSHIPPER. n. f. [from worship.]
Adorer; one that worships.

What art thou, thou idol ceremony?
What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more
Of mortal griefs than do thy worshippers?

Those places did not confine the immensity of God, nor give his worshippers a nearer approach to heaven by their height.

If posterity takes its notions of us from our medals, they must fancy one of our kings paid a great devotion to Minerva, that another was a professed worshipper of Apollo.

By sanctifying the seventh day after they had laboured six, they avowed themselves worshippers of that only God who created heaven and earth.

WORST. adj. [the superlative of bad, formed from worfe; bad, worfe, worst.] Most bad; most ill.

If thou hadst not been born the worst of men, Thou hadst been knave and flatterer. Shakspeare
The pain that any one actually feels is still of all other the worst; and it is with anguish they cry out. Locke.

WORST. n. s. The most calamitous or wicked state; the utmost height or degree of any thing ill.

Who is 't can say I'm at the worst?

I'm worse than e'er I was,

And worse I may be yet: the worst is not,

So long as we can say, this is the worst. Shakspeare.

That you may be armed against the worst in this unhappy state of affairs in our distressed country, I send you these considerations on the nature and immortality of the soul. Digby.

Happy the man, and happy he alone,

He who can call to-day his own:

He who secure within can say,

To-morrow do thy worst, for I have liv'd to-day. Dryden.

Sir Roger gets into the frontiers of his estate before he beats about in search of a hare, on purpose to spare his own fields, where he is always sure of finding diversion when the worst comes to the worst. Spectator.

To WORST. v. a. [from the adjective.] To defeat; to overthrow.

The case will be no worse than where two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword given him again without further hurt. Suckling.

The bear was in a greater fright, Beat down and worsted by the knight. Hudibras.

It is downright madness to contend where we are sure to be worsted. L'Estrange.

The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army. South.

She could have brought the chariot again, when she saw her brother worsted in the duel. Dryden.

WORSTED. n. s. [from Worsted, a town in Norfolk famous for the woollen manufacture.] Woollen yarn; wool spun.

A base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three suited, hundred pound, filthy, worsted-stocking knave. Shakspeare.

There Ridpath, Roper cudgel'd might ye view; The very worsted still look'd black and blue. Pope.

WORT. n. s. [pint, Saxon; wort, Dut.]

1. Originally a general name for an herb; whence it still continues in many, as liverwort, spleenwort.

2. A plant of the cabbage kind.

3. [hynt, Saxon.] New beer, either unfermented, or in the act of fermentation.

If in the wort of beer, while it worketh, before it be tunned, the burrage be often changed with fresh, it will make a sovereign drink for melancholy. Bacon.

To WORTH, or Wurth. v. n. [peonð, Saxon.] To be. This word is only now retained in wo worth, or wurth; wo be.

Wo worth the man

That first did teach the curled steel to bite

In his own flesh, and make way to the living sp'rit. Spenser.

WORTH, in the termination of the names of places, comes from ponð, a court or farm; or ponðig, a street or road. Gibson.

WORTH. n. s. [peonð, Saxon.]

1. Price; value.

Your clemency will take in good worth the offer of these my simple and mean labours. Hooker.

What is worth in any thing,

But so much money as 'twill bring? Hudibras.

A common marcasite shall have the colour of gold exactly; and yet upon trial yield nothing of worth but vitriol and sulphur. Woodward.

2. Excellence; virtue.

How can you him unworthy then decree, In whose chief part your worths implanted be? Sidney.

Is there any man of worth and virtue, although not instructed in the school of Christ, that had not rather end the days of this transitory life as Cyrus, than to sink down with them of whom Elihu hath said, memento moriuntur? Hooker.

Having from these suck'd all they had of worth, And brought home that faith which you carried forth, I thoroughly love. Donne.

Her virtue, and the conscience of her worth, That would be woo'd. Milton.

A nymph of your own train Gives us your character in such a strain, As none but she, who in that court did dwell, Could know such worth, or worth describe so well. Waller.

Detested worth, like beauty disarray'd, To covert flies, of praise itself afraid. Young.

3. Importance; valuable quality.

Peradventure those things, whereupon time was then well spent, have fithence that lost their dignity and worth. Hooker.

Take a man possessed with a strong desire of any thing, and the worth and excellency of that thing appears much greater than when that desire is quite extinguished. South.

WORTH. adj.

1. Equal in price to; equal in value to.

Women will love her that she is a woman, More worth than any man; men that she is The rarest of all women. Shakspeare.

Anxious pains we all the day, In search of what we like, employ; Scorning at night the worthless prey, We find the labour gave the joy. Prior.

Am I then doom'd to fall By a boy's hand, and for a worthless woman? Addison.

WORTHLESSNESS. n. s. [from worthless.]

Want of excellence; want of dignity; want of value.

But that mine own worthlessness spoils the conceit, I could think our company parallel to the seven wise men of Greece. Mure.

A notable account is given us by the apostle of this windy insignificant charity of the will, and of the worthlessness of it, not enlivened by deeds. South.

WORTHY. adj. [from worth.]

1. Deserving; such as merits: with of before the thing deserved.

She determined never to marry any but him whom she thought worthy of her, and that was one in whom all worthinesses were harboured. Sidney.

Further I will not flatter you, That all I see in you is worthy love, Than this; that nothing do I see in you That should merit hate. Shakspeare.

Thou art worthy of the sway, To whom the heav'ns in thy nativity Adjudg'd an olive branch and laurel crown. Shakspeare.

2. Valuable; noble; illustrious; having excellence or dignity.

If the best things have the perfectest and best operations, it will follow, that, seeing man is the worthiest creature on earth, and every society of men more worthy than any man, and of society that most excellent which we call the church.

Hooker.

He now on Pompey's basis lies along,
No worthier than the dust!

Shakspeare.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other gentiles, in point of religion and honour; though hope of success might invite some other choice.

Bacon.

Think of her worth, and think that God did mean,

This worthy mind should worthy things embrace:
Blot not her beauties with thy thoughts unclean,
Nor her dishonour with thy passion base.

Davies.

Happier thou mayst be, worthier canst not be.

Milton.

3. Having worth; having virtue.

The doctor is well money'd, and his friends
Potent at court; he, none but he, shall have her,
Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave her.

Shakspeare.

The matter I handle is the most important, within the whole extent of human nature, for a worthy person to employ himself about.

Digby.

We see, though order'd for the best,
Permitted laurels grace the lawless brow,
Th' unworthy rais'd, the worthy cast below.

Dryden.

4. Not good. A term of ironical commendation.

My worthy wife our arms mislaid,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd;
The door unlatch'd, and with repeated calls
Invites her former lord within my walls.

Dryden.

5. Suitable for any quality good or bad; equal in value; equal in dignity.

Flowers worthy of paradise.

Milton.

Thou, Drances, art below a death from me:
Let that vile soul in that vile body rest,
The lodging is well worthy of the guest.

Dryden.

My suff'rings for you make your heart my due;
Be worthy me, as I am worthy you.

Dryden.

6. Suitable to any thing bad.

The merciless Macdonald, Worthy to be a rebel; for to that
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon him.

Shakspeare.

Of choicest flow'rs a garland.

Milton.

WO'VEN. The participle passive of weave.

WOULD. The preterit of will.

1. It is generally used as an auxiliary verb with an infinitive, to which it gives the force of the subjunctive mood.

If God's providence did not so order it, cheats would daily be committed, which would justify private men out of their rights, and unhinge states.

Ray.

2. I WOULD do it. My resolution is that it should be done by me.

Thou WOULD'ST do it. Such must be the consequence to thee, that such should be thy act.

He WOULD, or it would. This must be the consequence to him or it, that such should be his act, or its effect.

3. The plural as the singular.

To themselves they live,
And to their island, that enough would give
A good inhabitant.

Chapman.

He, by the rules of his own mind, could construe no other end of men's doings but self-seeking, suddenly feared what they could do, and as suddenly suspected what they would do, and as suddenly hated them, as having both might and mind so to do.

Sidney.

There are several who would, or at least pretend they would, bear much in their own business, who will bear nothing at all.

Kettlewell.

4. Was or am resolved; I wish or wished to; I am or was willing.

Sidney.

You would be satisfied?—

—Would? nay, and will.

Shakspeare.

They know not what they are, nor what they would be, any further than that they would not be what they are.

L'Estrange.

It will be needless to enumerate all the simple ideas belonging to each sense: nor indeed is it possible, if we would; there being a great many more of them belonging to most of the senses than we have names for.

Locke.

By pleasure and pain I would be understood to signify, whatsoever delights or molests us, whether from the thoughts of our minds, or any thing operating on our bodies.

Locke.

5. It is a familiar term for wish to do, or to have.

What wouldst thou with us?

Shakspeare.

Mr. Slender, what would you with me?—
—I would little or nothing with you.

Shakspeare.

6. Should wish.

Celia, if you apprehend
The muse of your incensed friend;
Nor would that he record your blame,
And make it live; repeat the same:
Again deceive him, and again,
And then he swears he'll not complain.

Waller.

7. It is used in old authors for should.

The excess of diet would be avoided.

Bacon.

As for percolation, which belongeth to separation, trial would be made by clarifying by adhesion, with milk put into new beer and stirred with it.

Bacon.

8. It has the signification of I wish, or I pray. This, I believe, is improper, and formed by a gradual corruption of the phrase, would God; which originally imported, that God would, might God will, might God decree. From this phrase, ill understood, came would to God, thence I would to God; and thence I would, or elliptically would, came to signify I wish: and so it is used even in good authors, but ought not to be imitated.

I would my father look'd but with my eyes.

Shakspeare.

I would this musick would come.

I, this found I better know.

Shakspeare.

Wife men will do it without a law; I would there might be a law to restrain fools.

Would to heaven that youth such spirit did feed
Now in my nerves, and that my joints were knit
With such a strength, as made me then held fit
To lead men with Ulysses.

Chapman.

This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design: within rests more of fear
Than, my most worthy lords, I would there were.

Daniel.

Would thou hadst hearken'd to my words, and stay'd

With me, as I besought thee, when that strange Desire of wand'ring, this unhappy morn, Possess'd thee.

Milton.

Would God we might prevent the need of such unkindly expedients, and, by a thankful sense of what we have, provide to conserve it.

Decay of Piety.

I scarce am pleas'd, I tamely mount the throne;
Would Aurengzebe had all their souls in one.

Dryden.

And would to heav'n the storm you felt would bring

On Carthaginian coasts your wand'ring king.

Dryden.

WOULDING. n. f. [from would.] Motion of desire; disposition to any thing; propensity; inclination; incipient purpose.

solete. Spenser.

WRACK. n. f. [wrack, Dut. wnæce, Sax.
a wretch. The poets use wrack or wreck indifferently, as rhyme requires; the later writers of prose commonly wreck.
See WRECK.]

1. Destruction of a ship by winds or rocks.
Now with full sails into the port I move,
And safely can unlade my breast of love,
Quiet and calm: why should I then go back,
To tempt the second hazard of a wrack? Dryden.

2. Ruin; destruction. This is the true Saxon meaning.

With use of evil, growing more and more evil,
they took delight in slaughter, and pleased themselves in making others wrack the effect of their power. Sidney.

And I would call it fair play. Shakspeare.

Some unhatch'd practice
Hath puddled his clear spirit; and in such cases
Men's natures wrangle with inferior things,
Though great ones are their object. Shakspeare.

How wounding a spectacle is it to see those, who were by Christ designed for fishers of men, picking up shells on the shore, and unmanly wrangling about them too! Decay of Piety.

In incomplete ideas we impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others. Locke.

Amongst unthinking men, who examine not scrupulously ideas, but confound them with words, there must be endless dispute and wrangling. Locke.

His great application to the law had not infected his temper with any thing litigious; he did not know what it was to wrangle on indifferent points. Addison.

Fill'd with the sense of age, the fire of youth,
A scorn of wrangling, yet a zeal for truth. Pope.

And all the question, wrangle e'er so long,
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong? Pope.

Will in concealment wrap me up awhile;
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve
Lending me this acquaintance. Shakspeare.

King John fled to Lascus, who was careful how to comfort him, wrapt up in so many calamities, after the loss of his kingdom. Knolles.

Things reflected on, in gross and transiently, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty in them,
and are thought to be wrapped up in impenetrable obscurity. Locke.

5. [It is often corruptly written for rap or rapt, from rapio, Latin.] To snatch up miraculously.

Whatever things were discovered to St. Paul, when he was wrapped up into the third heaven, all the description he makes is, that there are such things as eye hath not seen, ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive. Locke.

6. To transport; to put in ecstasy: for rapt.

Much more the reverent fire prepar'd to say,
Wrapp'd with his joy, how the two armies lay. Cowley.

Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreakful heaven. Shakspeare.
She in Olympus' to Must visit Vulcan for new arms, to serve her wreak-ful son. Chapman.

WRE'AKLESS. adj. [I know not whether this word be miswritten for reckless, careless; or comes from wreak, revenge, and means unrevenging.]

So flies the wreakless shepherd from the wolf;
So first the harmless flock doth yield his fleece,
And next his throat unto the butcher's knife. Shakspeare.

WREATH. n. f. [pneoð, Saxon.]

1. Any thing curled or twisted.

The wreath of three was made a wreath of five:
to these three first titles of the two houses, were hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about, which agreeth with the description of an unicorn's horn in Ælian. Brown.

WRECK. n. f. [pæcce, Saxon, a miserable person; wracke, Dutch, a ship broken.]

1. Destruction by being driven on rocks or shallows at sea; destruction by sea.

Fair be ye sure; but hard and obstinate,
As is a rock amidst the raging floods;
'Gainst which a ship, of succour desolate,
Doth suffer wreck both of herself and goods. Spenser.

Like those that see their wreck
Ev'n on the rocks of death; and yet they strain,
That death may not them idly find t' attend
To their uncertain task, but work to meet their end. Daniel.

Think not that flying fame reports my fate;
I present, I appear, and my own wreck relate. Dryden.

2. Dissolution by violence.

Not only Paradise,
In this commotion, but the starry cope
Had gone to wreck. Milton.

The soul shall flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds. Addison.

3. Ruin; destruction.

Whether he was Combin'd with Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not. Shakspeare.

4. It is misprinted here for wreak.

He cried as raging seas are wont to roar,
When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threat. Spenser.

5. The thing wrecked: as, the ship was considered as a wreck.

To WRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or sands.
Have there been any more such tempests, wherein she hath wretchedly been wrecked? Spenser.

A pilot's thumb,
Wreck'd as homeward he did come. Shakspeare.
The coral found growing upon wrecked ships and lost anchors, that are daily dragged up out of the sea, demonstrates that coral continues to be formed to this day. Woodward.

W R E

2. To ruin.

Weak and envied, if they should conspire,
They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire. Daniel.

3. In the following passages it is ignorantly used for wreak, in its different senses of revenge and execute.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakspeare.

I faint! I die! the goddesses cried:
O cruel, couldst thou find none other
To wreck thy spleen on, parricide?
Like Nero, thou hast slain thy mother. Prior.

To WRECK. v. n. To suffer wreck.

With manlier objects we must try
His constancy, with such as have more shew
Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular praise,
Rocks whereon greatest men have often wreck'd. Milton.

WREN. n. f. [penna, Saxon; regulus,
Latin.] A small bird.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakspeare.

All ages have conceived that the wren is the least of birds; yet the discoveries of America have shewed us one far less, the hum-bird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

To WRENCH. v. a. [pungan, Saxon; wrenghen, Dutch.]

1. To pull by violence; to wrest; to force.

Wrench his sword from him. Shakspeare.
Oh form!

How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! Shakspeare.
Give me that mattock and the wrenching iron. Shakspeare.

Cæsar's army, wanting something, demanded a mission or discharge, with no intention it should be granted; but thought by that means to wrench him to their other desires. Bacon.

Sing the Parthian, when transfix'd he lies,
Wrenching the Roman jav'lin from his thighs. Dryden.

Struggling to get loose, I broke the strings, and wrenched out the pegs that fastened my arm to the ground. Swift.

2. To sprain; to distort.

O most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
Which, like an engine, wrencht my frame of nature
From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakspeare.
You wrenched your foot against a stone, and were forced to stay. Swift.

WRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A violent pull or twist.

2. A sprain.

Some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench, the whole leg thereby loses its strength. Locke.

3. Wrenches, in Chaucer, signifies means, fleights, subtilties; which is, I believe,
the sense here.

He resolved to make his profit of this business of Britain, as a quarrel for war; and that of Naples as a wrench and mean for peace. Bacon.

To WREST. v. a. [pærstan, Saxon.]

1. To twist by violence; to extort by writhing or force.

To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Ascham.

To what wretched state reserv'd,
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n,
To be thus wrested from us? Milton.

Where you charged in person, you were a conqueror: the rebels afterwards recovered strength, and wrested that victory from others that they had lost to you. Dryden.

W R E

Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our hands.
And bid us not delight in Roman blood Unprofitably shed, Addison.
O prince, I blush to think what I have said;
But fate has wrested the confession from me. Addison.

2. To distort; to writhe; to foree.

So far to extend their speeches is to wrest them against their meaning. Hooker.

My father's purposes have been mistook,
And some about him have too lavishly Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakspeare.

Wrest once the law to your authority;
To do a great right, do a little wrong. Shakspeare.

WREST. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Distortion; violence.

Whereas it is concluded, out of weak premises, that the retaining of divers things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can shew that they have done ill; what needeth this wrest, to draw out from us an accusation of foreign churches? Hooker.

2. It is used in Spenser and Shakspeare for an active or moving power: I suppose, from the force of a tilter acting with his lance in his rest.

Adown he keft it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groneful sound. Fairy Queen.

Antenor's such a wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slacken, Wanting his manage. Troilus and Cressida.

3. An instrument to tune.

WRE'STER. n. s. [from wrest.] He who wrests.

To WRE'STLE. v. n. [from wrest.]

prize more. Shakspeare.

Another, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clavicle from the sternon. Wiseman.

To play or wrestle well, it should be used with those that do it better. Temple.

None in the leap spring with so strong a bound,
Or firmer in the wrestling press the ground. Pope.

2. To struggle; to contend: followed by with.

I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedick,
To wish him wrestle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it. Shakspeare.

James knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies, and so abhorred to be entangled in such. Clarendon.

WRE'STLER. n. s. [from wrestle.]

1. One who wrestles; one who professes the athletick art.

When the young wrestlers at their sport grew warm,

Old Milo wept to see his naked arm. Denham.

'Tis not from whom, but where we live;

The place does oft those graces give:

Great Julius, on the mountains bred,

A flock perhaps, or herd, had led;

He, that the world subdued, had been

But the best wrestler on the green. Waller.

2. One who contends in wrestling.

So earnest with thy God, can no new care,
No sense of danger, interrupt thy prayer?

The sacred wrestler, till a blessing giv'n,

Quits not his hold, but halting conquers heav'n. Waller.

Two wrestlers help to pull each other down. Dryden.

WRETCH. n. s. [pnecca, Saxon.]

1. A miserable mortal.

When I loved, I was a wretch. Accidence.

She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;

He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd;

That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more. Shakspeare.

W R E

The butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strives. Shakspeare.

Illustrious wretch! repine not nor reply;
View not what heav'n ordains with reason's eye;
For bright the object is, the distance is too high. Prior.

2. A worthless sorry creature.

Base-minded wretches! are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as for respect of gain some poultry wool may yield you, to let so much time pass without knowing perfectly her estate? Sidney.

He now

Has these poor men in question: never saw I Wretches so quake; they kneel, they kiss the earth,
Forwear themselves as often as they speak. Shakspeare.

Title of honour, worth and virtue's right,
Should not be given to a wretch so vile. Daniel.

When they are gone, a company of starved hungry wretches shall take their places. L'Estrange.

3. It is used by way of slight, or ironical pity, or contempt.

When soon away the wasp doth go:
Poor wretch was never frightened so;

He thought his wings were much too slow,

O'erjoy'd they so were parted. Drayton.

Then, if the spider find him fast beset,

She issues forth, and runs along her loom:

She joys to touch the captive in her net,

And drags the little wretch in triumph home. Dry.

4. It is sometimes a word of tenderness, as we now say poor thing.

Excellent wretch. Shakspeare.

Chastened but thus, and thus his lesson taught,

The happy wretch she put into her breast. Sidney.

WRE'TCHED. adj. [from wretch.]

1. Miserable; unhappy.

These we should judge to be most miserable, but that a wretcheder sort there are, on whom whereas nature hath bestowed ripe capacity, their evil disposition seriously goeth about therewith to apprehend God, as being not God. Hooker.

O cruel death! to those you are more kind
Than to the wretched mortals left behind. Waller.

Why dost thou drive me
To range all o'er a waste and barren place,
To find a friend? The wretched have no friends. Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.

3. Sorry; pitiful; paltry; worthless.

When God was served with legal sacrifices, such was the miserable and wretched condition of some men's minds, that the best of every thing they had being culled out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor, starved, or diseased thing, not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.

Affected noise is the most wretched thing
That to contempt can empty scribblers bring. Roscommon.

Forgive the many failings of those who, with their wretched art, cannot arrive to those heights that you possess. Dryden.

4. Despicable; hatefully contemptible.

An adventure worthy to be remembered for the unused examples therein, as well of true natural goodness as of wretched ungratefulness. Sidney.

WRE'TCHEDLY. adv. [from wretched.]

1. Miserably; unhappily.

From these two wars, so wretchedly entered into,
the duke's ruin took its date. Clarendon.

2. Meanly; despicably.

When such little shuffling arts come once to be ripped up, and laid open, how poorly and wretchedly must that man sneak, who finds himself guilty and baffled too. South.

WRE'TCHEDNESS. n. s. [from wretched.]

1. Misery; unhappiness; afflicted state.

My misery cannot be greater than it is: fear not the danger of my blind steps, I cannot fall worse than I am; and do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchedness. Sidney.

He 'gan inquire
What hard mishap him brought to such distress,
And made that cautif's thrall the thrall of wretched- ness. Spenser.

W R I

Clarion did at last decline
To lowest wretchedness; and is there then Such rancour in the hearts of mighty men? Spenser.

When they are weary of wars, and brought down to extreme wretchedness, then they creep a little, and sue for grace, till they have recovered their strength again. Spenser.

I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing. Shakspeare.

We have with the feeling lost the very memory of such wretchedness as our forefathers endured by those wars, of all others the most cruel. Raleigh.

2. Pitifulness; despicableness.

WRE'TCHLESS. adj. [This is, by I know not whose corruption, written for reck- less.] Careless; mindless; heedless.

For any man to put off his present repentance, on contemplation of a possibility that his latter repentance may serve the turn, is the most wretched presumption, and hath no promise of mercy annexed to it. Hammond.

If persons of so circumspect a piety have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wretched ositancy? Government of the Tongue.

WRE'TCHLESSNESS. n. s. [from wretch- less.] Carelessness.

If he may not command them, then that law doth wrong that bindeth him to bring them forth to be justified. Spenser.

They ever do pretend
To have receiv'd a wrong, who wrong intend. Daniel.

One spake much of right and wrong. Milton.
Imitation of an author is the most advantageous way for a translator, to shew himself, but the greatest wrong which can be done to the reputation of the dead. Dryden.

Cowley preferred a garden and a friend to those whom, in our own wrong, we call the great. Dryden.

Expecting more in my own wrong,
Protracting life, I've liv'd a day too long. Dryden.

In the judgment of right and wrong, every man has a self. Watts.

2. Errour; not right; not truth.

Be not blindly guided by the throng;
The multitude is always in the wrong. Roscommon.

Here was wrong on both sides; and what would follow but confusion? Lesley.

Proceed; quoth Dick, sir, I aver
You have already gone too far;
When people once are in the wrong,
Each line they add is much too long:
Who fastest walks, but walks astray,
Is only farthest from his way. Prior.

WRONG. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Not morally right; not just; not agreeable to propriety or truth; not true.

I find you are an invincible Amazon, since you will overcome, though in a wrong matter. Sidney.

If it be right to comply with the wrong, then it is wrong to comply with the right. Lesley.

When the dictates of honour are contrary to those of religion and equity, they give wrong, ambitious, and false ideas of what is good and laudable. Spektator.

Their hearts are constantly employed, perverted, and kept in a wrong state, by the indiscreet use of such things as are lawful to be used. Law.

2. Not physically right; unfit; unsuitable.

Of Gloster's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot,
And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out. Shakespeare.

We never think of the main business of life, till a vain repentance minds us of it at the wrong end. L'Estrange.

Dividing a living of five hundred pounds a year into ten parts, is a contrivance, the meaning whereof hath got on the wrong side of my comprehension. Swift.

Singularity shews something wrong in the mind. Clarissa.

3. Acting improperly.

Who want, while through black life they dream along,
Sense to be right, and passion to be wrong. Young.

WRONG. adv. Not rightly; amiss.

A thousand odd capricious men's minds are acted by, may make one man quote another man's words wrong. Locke.

Ten censure wrong, for one that writes amiss. Pope.

To WRONG. v. a. [from the noun.] To injure; to use unjustly, either by doing injury, or imputing evil without justice.

So worthy a part of divine service we should greatly wrong, if we did not esteem preaching as the blessed ordinance of God. Hooker.

For fear the stones her tender foot should wrong,
Be strew'd with fragrant flowers all along. Spenser.
Judge me, you gods! wrong I mine enemy? Shakespeare.

Once more farewell!

And know thou wrong'st me, if thou think'st
Ever was love or ever grief like mine. Addison.

WRONGDOER. n. s. [wrong and doer.] An injurious person.

She resolved to spend all her years in bewailing the wrong, and yet praying for the wrongdoer. Sidney.

If any seat be taken away by a stranger, the churchwarden may have action against the wrongdoer. Ayliffe.

WRONGER. n. s. [from wrong.] He that injures; he that does wrong.

That cuckold lives in bliss,
Who, certain of his fate, loves not his wronger. Shakespeare.

Many times a prince is driven to spend far more of his treasure in punishing by war the wrongers of his people, than the loss of his people did amount unto. Raleigh.

WRONGFUL. adj. [wrong and full.] Injurious; unjust.

I am so far from granting thy request,
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit. Shakespeare.

He that hath wronged so in daily trade, that he knows not in what measure he hath done it, must redeem his fault by alms, according to the value of his wrongful dealing. Taylor.

Those whom forms of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause,
Nor want they lots, nor judges to review
The wrongful sentence, and award a new. Dryden.

WRONGFULLY. adv. [from wrongful.] Unjustly.

Dorus, said Pamela, you blame your fortune very wrongfully, since the fault is not in fortune, but in you, that cannot frame yourself to your fortune; and as wrongfully do require Moplia to so great a disparagement as to her father's servant. Sidney.

This poor fellow
He had thought to murder wrongfully. Shakespeare.

Salus then, exclaiming loud,
Urges his cause may in the court be heard,
And pleads, the prize is wrongfully conferr'd. Dryden.

I cry thee mercy, for suspecting a friar of the least good-nature; what, would you accuse him wrongfully? Dryden.

He who suffers wrongfully in a man's opinion, resolves to give him reason for his suspicion. Spektator.

WRONGHEAD. } adj. [wrong and head.]

WRONGHEAD'D. } Having a perverse understanding.

Much do I suffer, much, to keep in peace
This jealous, waspish, wronghead, rhyming race. Pope.

WRONGLESSLY. adv. [from wrongless.]

Without injury to any.

Dearly esteemed of her for his exceeding good parts, being honourably courteous, and wronglessly valiant; considerately pleasant in conversation; and an excellent courtier, without unfaithfulness. Sidney.

WRONGLY. adv. [from wrong.] Unjustly; amiss.

What thou wouldst highly,
That wouldst thou holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet wouldst wrongly win. Shakespeare.

Madmen having joined together some ideas very wrongly, err, as men do that argue right from wrong principles. Locke.

WROTE. The pret. and part. of write.

No man has the estate of his soul drawn upon his face, nor the decree of his election wrote upon his forehead. He who would know a man thoroughly, must follow him into the closet of his heart; and inspection of which is only the prerogative of omniscience. South.

WROTH. adj. [wroð, Saxon; wrod, Danish.]

Angry. Out of use.

The Lord said unto Cain, Why art thou wroth? Genesis.

WROUGHT. [wroht, Saxon. The pret. and part. pass. as it seems, of work; as the Dutch wercken makes gerocht; or, more analogically, of the old word wreak.]

1. Effected; performed.

Why trouble ye the woman? for she hath wrought a good work upon me. Matthew.

The Jews wanted not power and ability to have convinced the world of the falsehood of these miracles, had they never been wrought. Stephens.

2. Influenced; prevailed on.

Had I thought the sight of my poor image Would thus have wrought you, for the stone is mine,

I 'd not have shewed it. Shakspeare.

If thou be one that hast, by the help of God's grace, been wrought upon by these calls, and brought from a prophane, or worldly, to a christian course of life, thou art surely in the highest degree tied to magnify and praise his goodness. Duty of Man.

Nor number nor example with him wrought

To swerve from truth. Milton.

Do not I know him? could his brutal mind

Be wrought upon? could he be just or kind? Dryden.

This Artemisa by her charms,

And all her sex's cunning, wrought the king. Rowe.

3. Produced; caused.

All his good prov'd ill in me,

And wrought but malice. Milton.

They wrought by their faithfulness the publick safety. Dryden.

This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles, who every where speak with astonishment of these truths they met with in this new magazine of learning which was opened. Addison.

His too eager love

Has made him busy to his own destruction,

His threats have wrought this change of mind in Pyrhus. Philips.

4. Worked; laboured.

W R O

They that wrought in silver, and whose works are unsearchable, are gone down to the grave. Bar.

Moses and Eleazar took the gold, even all wrought jewels. Numbers.

Celestial panoply, divinely wrought. Milton.

What might be wrought

Futil, or graven in metal. Milton.

5. Gained; attained.

We ventur'd on such dang'rous seas,

That if we wrought out life, 'twas ten to one. Shakspeare.

6. Operated.

Such another field

They dreaded worse than hell: so much the fear

Of thunder, and the sword of Michael,

Wrought still within them. Milton.

7. Used in labour.

Take an heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke. Deuteronomy.

8. Worked; driven.

As infection from body to body is received many times by the body passive, yet is it by the good disposition thereof repulsed and wrought out, before it be formed in a disease. Bacon.

9. Actuated.

Vain Morat, by his own rashness wrought,

Too soon discovered his ambitious thought;

Believ'd me his before I spoke him fair,

And pitch'd his head into the ready snare. Dryden.

10. Manufactured.

It had been no less a breach of peace to have wrought any mine of his, than it is now a breach of peace to take a town of his in Guiana, and burn it. Raleigh.

11. Formed.

He that hath wrought us for the same thing, is

God. 2 Corinthians.

12. Excited by degrees; produced by degrees.

The spirit is wrought,

To dare things high, set up an end my thought. Chapman.

The two friends had wrought themselves to such an habitual tenderness for the children under their direction, that each of them had the real passion of a father. Addison.

Advantage was taken of the sanguine temper which so many successes had wrought the nation up to. Swift.

Whatever littleness and vanity is to be observed in the minds of women, it is, like the cruelty of butchers, a temper that is wrought into them by that life which they are taught and accustomed to lead. Lavo.

W R Y

13. Guided; managed.

A ship by skilful steerman wrought. Milton.

14. Agitated; disturbed.

We stay upon your leisure—

—Give me your favour; my dull brain was wrought

With things forgot. Shakspeare.

WRUNG. The pret. and part. pass. of wring.

He first cald to me; then my hand he wrung. Chapman.

No mortal was ever so much at ease, but his shoe wrung him somewhere. L'Estrange.

The tender anguish nature shoots

Through the wrung bosom of the dying man. Thomson.

WRY. adj. [from writhe.]

1. Crooked; deviating from the right direction.

Sometimes to her news of myself to tell

I go about, but then is all my best

Wry words, and stamm'ring, or else doltish dumb;

Say then, can this but of enchantment come? Sid.

2. Distorted.

It is but a kick with thy heels, and a wry mouth, and fir Roger will be with thee. Arbutnot.

Instructive work! whose wry-mouth'd portraiture

Display'd the fates her confessors endure. Pope.

Cutting the wry neck is never to be practised, but when the disorder is a contraction of the mas-

3. Wrung; perverted; wrested.

He mangles and puts a wry sense upon protestant writers. Atterbury.

To WRY. v. n. [from the adjective.] To be contorted and writhed; to deviate from the right direction.

These wry too much on the right hand, ascribing to the holy scripture such kind of perfection as it cannot have. Sandys.

To WRY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make to deviate; to distort.

To what pass are our minds brought, that from the right line of virtue are wryed to these crooked shifts? Sidney.

WRY'NECK. n. s. [torquilla, Lat.] A bird.

X

X Is a letter, which, though found in Saxon words, begins no word in the English language.

Y, At the beginning of words, is commonly taken, though I think erroneously, for a consonant; at the end, and when it follows a consonant, is a vowel, and has the sound of i. It is used at the end of words, and whenever two ii's would come together; and in words derived from the Greek, to express the u. Y was much used by the Saxons, whence

VOL. II.

Y A C

y is found for i in the old English writers. Y is, in old English, sometimes prefixed as an increasing syllable to preterits and passive participles of verbs. It seems borrowed from ge, the Saxon augment of the preterit. It is sometimes put before present tenses, but I think erroneously.

YACHT. n. s. [a Dutch word.] A small ship for carrying passengers.

Y A R

YARD. n. s. [geard, Saxon.]

1. Enclosed ground adjoining to a house.

One of the lions leaped down into a neighbour's yard, where, nothing regarding the crowing of the cocks, he eat them up. Brown.

Xanthus one day sent Æsop into the yard, and bade him look well about him. L'Estrange.

His wanton kids, with budding horns prepar'd,

Fight harmless battles in his homely yard. Dryden.

2. [geard, Saxon.] A measure of three feet.

Y A W

A peer, a counsellor, and a judge, are not to be measured by the common yard, but by the pole of special grace. Bacon.

The arms spread cross in a straight line, and measured from one end of the long finger on one hand to that of the other, made a measure equal to the stature, and is named a fathom. Half of that, viz. from the end of the long finger of either arm, so spread, to the middle of the breast, is with us called a yard. Holder.

An aqueduct of a Gothick structure, that conveys water from Mount St. Francis to Spoletto, from the foundation of the lowest arch to the top, is two hundred and thirty yards. Addison.

3. The supports of the sails.

A breeze from shore began to blow;
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails
Let fall to court the wind. Dryden.

YARDWAND. n. f. [yard and wand.] A measure of a yard.

All the revolutions in nature can give it nothing more than different degrees of dimensions. What affinity has thinking with such attributes? no more than there is between a syllogism and a yardwand. Collier.

YARE. adj. [geape, Saxon.] Ready; dexterous; eager.

Yare, yare, good Iros, quick.—Methinks I hear Antony call. Shakspeare.

I do desire to learn, sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your turn, you shall find me yare. Shakspeare.

YARELY. adv. [from yare.] Dexterously; skilfully.

The filken tackles

Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
That yarely frame the office. Shakspeare.

YARN. n. f. [gearn, Saxon.] Spun wool; woollen thread.

You would be another Penelope; yet they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses's absence did but fill Ithaca full of moths. Shakspeare.

The web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipt them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues. Shakspeare.

Yarn is a commodity very proper to this country, which of all others ought to be most encouraged. Temple.

It may be useful for the reeling of yarn. Wilkins.

The fates but only spin the coarser clue,
The finest of the wool is left for you.
Spare me but one small portion of the twine,
And let the filters cut below your line:
The rest among the rubbish may they sweep,
Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap. Dryden.

To YARR. v. n. [from the found; birrio, Lat.] To growl or snarl like a dog. Ainsworth.

YARROW. n. f. [millefolium, Latin.] A plant.

YAWL. n. f. A little vessel belonging to a ship, for convenience of passing to and from it.

To YAWN. v. n. [geonan, Saxon.]

1. To gape; to oscitate; to have the mouth opened involuntarily by fumes, as in sleepiness.

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. Shakspeare.

In yawning, the inner parchment of the ear is extended. When a man yawneth, he cannot hear so well. Bacon.

At length shook off himself, and ask'd the dame,
And asking yawn'd, for what intent she came? Dryden.

To whom the yawning pilot, fast asleep,
Me didst thou bid to trust the treacherous deep? Dryden.

2. To open wide.

The gashes,
That bloodily did yawn upon his face. Shakspeare.

Y E A

'Tis now the very witching time of night,
When churchyards yawn. Shakspeare.

Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
For swallowing up the treasure of the realm. Shakspeare.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd,
Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd. Sandys.

Hell at last

Yawning receiv'd them whole, and on them clos'd. Milton.

The sword pierc'd his tender sides;
Down fell the beauteous youth; the yawning wound
Gush'd out a purple stream. Dryden.

High she rear'd her arm, and with her sceptre struck

The yawning cliff: from its disparted height
Adown the mount the gushing torrent ran. Prior.

3. To express desire by yawning.

The chiefest thing at which lay-reformers yawn, is, that the clergy may, through conformity in condition, be poor as the apostles were. In which one circumstance if they imagine so great perfection, they must think that church which hath such store of mendicant friars, a church in that respect most happy. Hooker.

YAWN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Oscitation.

Thee, Paridel, she mark'd thee there,
Stretch'd on the rack of a too easy chair;
And heard thy everlasting yawn confess
The pains and penalties of idleness. Pope.

2. Gape; hiatus.

Hence to the borders of the marsh they go,
That mingles with the baleful streams below;
And sometimes with a mighty yawn, 'tis said,
Opens a dismal passage to the dead;
Who, pale with fear, the rending earth survey,
And startle at the sudden flash of day. Addison.

YAWNING. adj. [from yawn.] Sleepy; slumbering.

Ere to black Hecate's summons

The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note. Shakspeare.

YCLAD. part. for clad. Clothed.

Her sight did ravish, but her grace in speech,
Her words yclad with wisdom's majesty,
Make me from wond'ring fall to weeping joys. Shakspeare.

YCLE'PED. [the participle passive of clepe, to call; clepan, Saxon; with the increasing particle y, which was used in the old English, in the preterits and participles, from the Saxon ge.] Called; termed; named.

But come, thou goddess fair and free,
In heav'n yclep'd Euphrosyne,
And by men heart-eating mirth. Milton.

YDRA'D. The old preterit of To dread. Spenser.

YE. The nominative plural of thou.

Ye are they which justify yourselves. Luke.

YEA. adv. [ea, or gea, Saxon; ja, Danish, German, and Dutch.]

1. Yes. A particle of affirmation; meaning, it is so, or, is it so?

Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden? Genesis.

Let your conversation be yea, yea; nay, nay. Mattbew.

Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?
Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham.

2. A particle by which the sense is intended or enforced: not only so, but more than so.

I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd. Shakspeare.

A rascally, yea, forsooth knave, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security. Shakspeare.

From these Philippinæ are brought costly spices, Yea, and gold too. Abbot.

All the promises of God are yea, and amen;

Y E A

that is, are verified, which is the importance of yea; and confirmed, which is, meant by amen, into an immutability. Hammond.

They durst abide

Jehovah thund'ring out of Sion, thron'd
Between the cherubim; yea, often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines. Milton.

Notwithstanding this great proximity of man to himself; yea, and notwithstanding the observations made in all ages, we still remain ignorant of many things concerning ourselves. Hale.

To YEAD, or YEDE. v. n. preterit yode.

[This word seems to have been corruptly formed from geod, the Saxon preterit of gan.] To go; to march. Obsolete.

They wander at will, and stay at pleasure,
And to their folds yeade at their own leisure. Spenser.

Then bad the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdraw aside,

From whence she might behold that battle's proof,
And eke be safe from danger far defr'd. Spenser.

Yet for the yode thereat half aghast,
And Kiddy the door sparred after her fall. Spenser.

That same mighty man of God,
That bloud red billows like a walled front,
On either side disparted with his rod,
Till that his army dry-foot through them yed. Spenser.

To YEAN. v. n. [eanan, Saxon.] To bring young. Used of sheep.

This I scarcely drag along,
Who yeaning on the rocks has left her young. Dryden.

Ewes yean the polled lamb with the least danger. Mortimer.

YEA'NLING. n. f. [from yean.] The young of sheep.

All the yeanlings which were streak'd and pied Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakspeare.

YEAR. n. f. [geap, Saxon.]

1. If one by the word year mean twelve months of thirty days each, i. e. three hundred and sixty days; another intend a solar year, of three hundred sixty-five days; and a third mean a lunar year, or twelve lunar months, i. e. three hundred sixty-four days, there will be a great variation and error in their account of things, unless they are well apprized of each other's meaning. Watts.

See the minutes, how they run:
How many make the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shakspeare.

With the year

Seasons return, but not to me returns
Day, or the sweet approach of even or morn. Milton.

Though we suppose but the addition of one man for every thousand years, yet long before this time there should have been a greater number than there could be lands in the earth. Wilkins.

The doctor, upon occasion, calculating his expences on himself, found them to be not above five pound in the year. Fell.

Oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them, to serve them for many years laying, allowing such a proportion for every year as will serve for one or two incubations. Roy.

He accepted a curacy of thirty pounds a year. Swift.

2. It is often used plurally, without a plural termination.

I fight not once in forty year. Shakspeare.

3. In the plural, old age.

Some mumble-news,
That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd, Told out intents. Shakspeare.

There died also Cecile, mother to king Edward iv. being of extreme years, and who had lived to see three princes of her body crowned, and ten murdered. Bacon.

YEL

He look'd in years, yet in his years were seen
A youthful vigour, and autumnal green. Dryden.
YE'ARLING. adj. [from year.] Being a year old.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.
YE'ARLY. adj. [from year.] Annual; happening every year; lasting a year.

The yearly course that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holiday. Shakspeare.

Why the changing oak should shed
The yearly honour of his stately head;
Whilst the distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.

YE'ARLY. adv. Annually; once a year.

He that outlives this day, and sees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, to-morrow is Saint Crispin. Shakspeare.

For numerous blessings yearly shower'd,
And property with plenty crown'd;
For freedom still maintain'd alive;
For these, and more, accept our pious praise. Dryden.

Not numerous are our joys when life is new,
And yearly some are falling of the few. Young.

TO YEARN. v. n. [earnan, Saxon.] To feel great internal uneasiness. In Spenser it is sometimes earn. It is by Spenser used for desire, or the pain of longing; it now implies tenderness or pity.

He despis'd to tread in due degree,
But chaf'd, and foam'd, with courage fierce and stern,
And to be eas'd of that base burden still did yearn. Spenser.

Make the libbard stern
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn. Spenser.

Though peeping close into the thick,
Might see the moving of some quick:
But were it fairy, fiend, or snake,
My courage earned it to wake,
And manfully thereat shot. Spenser.

Falstaff, he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore. Shakspeare.

Joseph made haste; for his bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he sought where to weep, and he enter'd into his chamber. Genesis.

When the fair Leucothoe he spy'd,
To check his steeds impatient Phœbus yearn'd,
Though all the world was in his course concern'd. Waller.

Yet for all the yearning pain
Y' have suffer'd for their loves, in vain,
I fear they'll prove so nice and coy,
To have, and t' hold, and to enjoy. Hudibras.

Where our heart does but relent, his melts;
where our eye pities, his bowels yearn. South.

At beholding the miseries of others, they find such yearnings in their bowels, and such sensible commotions raised in their breasts, as they can by no means satisfy. Calamy.

Your mother's heart yearns towards you. Addison.

Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd;
But Anticlus, unable to controul,
Spoke loud the language of his yearning soul. Pope.

TO YEARN. v. a. To grieve; to vex.

She laments for it, that it would Yearn your heart to see it. Shakspeare.

I am not covetous of gold,
It yearns me not if men my garments wear. Shakspeare.

YEAST. n. f. See YEST.

YELK. n. f. [from gealepe, yellow, Sax.] The yellow part of the egg. It is commonly pronounced, and often written, yolk.

The yolk of the egg conduceth little to the generation of the bird, but only to the nourishment of the same: for if a chicken be opened, when it is new-hatched, you shall find much of the yolk remaining. Bacon.

That a chicken is formed out of the yolk of an egg, with some ancient philosophers, the people still opinion. Brown.

YEL

All the feather'd kind
From th' included yolk, not ambient white, arose. Dryden.

TO YELL. v. n. To cry out with horrour and agony.

Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells,
Nor grisly vultures, make us once appear'd. Spenser.

Each new morn,
New widows howl, new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike heav'n on the face, that it resounds,
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like syllables of doleour. Shakspeare.

Now worse than ere he was before,
Poor Puck doth yell, poor Puck doth roar,
That wak'd queen Mab, who doubted fore
Some treason had been wrought her. Drayton.

Yelling monsters that with ceaseless cry Surround me. Milton.

Night-struck fancy dreams the yelling ghost. Thomson.

YELL. n. f. [from the verb.] A cry of horror.

With like tim'rous accent and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spread in populous cities. Shakspeare.

Hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains.
The Trojan stood astonish'd at their cries,
And ask'd his guide from whence those yells arise. Dryden.

Others in frantick mood
Run howling through the streets; their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin. Philips.

YELLOW. adj. [gealepe, Sax. gheluwwe, Dutch; giallo, Italian.] Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.

Only they that come to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakspeare.

He brought the green ear and the yellow sheaf. Milton.

After a lively orange, followed an intense, bright, and copious yellow, which was also the best of all the yellows. Newton.

Negligent of food,
Scarce seen, he wades among the yellow broom. Thomson.

YE'LOWBOY. n. f. A gold coin. A very low word.

John did not starve the cause; there wanted not yellowboys to see counsel. Arbutnot.

YE'LOWHAMMER. n. f. [cenchrismus bellonii.] A bird.

YELLOWISH. adj. [from yellow.] Approaching to yellow.

Although amber be commonly of a yellowish colour, yet there is found of it also black, white, brown, green, blue, and purple. Woodward.

YELLOWISHNESS. n. f. [from yellowish.]
The quality of approaching to yellow.

Bruised madder, being drenched with the like al-calizate solution, exchanged its yellowishness for a redness. Boyle.

YELLOWNESS. n. f. [from yellow.]

1. The quality of being yellow.

Apples, covered in lime and ashes, were well matured, as appeared in the yellowness and sweetness. Bacon.

Yellowness of the skin and eyes, and a saffron coloured urine, are signs of an inflammatory disposition of the liver. Arbutnot.

2. It is used in Shakspeare for jealousy.

Ford I will possess with yellowness. Shakspeare.

YE'LLOWS. n. f. A disease in horses.

When the gallpipe is stopped up, that matter which should be turned into gall is carried back into the blood, and tinctures it yellow; so that the eyes, inside of the lips, flaver, and all the parts of the horse that are capable of shewing the colour, appear yellow. Farrier's Dict.

His horse sped with spavins, and rai'd with the yellows. Shakspeare.

TO YELP. v. n. [gealpan, Saxon.] To bark as a beagle-hound after his prey.

YES

A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs. Shakspeare.

YEOMAN. n. f. [Of this word the original is much doubted: the true etymology seems to be that of Junius, who derives it from geman, Frisick, a villager.]

1. A man of a small estate in land; a farmer; a gentleman farmer.

Gentlemen should use their children as the honest farmers and substantial yeomen do theirs. Locke.

He that has a spaniel by his side is a yeoman of about one hundred pounds a year, an honest man:
he is just qualified to kill an hare. Addison.

2. It seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers:
whence we have still yeomen of the guard.

Tall yeomen seemed they, and of great might,
And were enraged ready still for fight. Spenser.

You, good yeomen,

Whose limbs were made in England, shew us here
The mettle of your pasture. Shakspeare.

He instituted, for the security of his person, a band of fifty archers, under a captain, to attend him, by the name of yeomen of his guard. Bacon.

Th' appointment for th' ensuing night he heard;
And therefore in the cavern had prepar'd
Two brawny yeomen of his trusty guard. Dryden.

At Windsor St. John whispers me i' th' ear;
The waiters stand in ranks, the yeomen cry
Make room! as if a duke were passing by. Swift.

3. It was probably a freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.

His grandfather was Lionel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England:
Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root? Shakspeare.

4. It seems to have had likewise the notion of a gentleman servant.

A jolly yeoman, marshal of the hall,
Whose name was appetite, he did bestow
Both guests and meats. Spenser.

YEOMANRY. n. f. [from yeoman.] The collective body of yeomen.

This did amortize a great part of the lands of the kingdom unto the hold and occupation of the yeomanry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers. Bacon.

TO YERK. v. a. [of unknown etymology.]
To throw out or move with a spring.

A leaping horse is said to yerk, or strike out his hind legs, when he flings and kicks with his whole hind quarters, stretching out the two hinder legs near together, and even to their full extent. Far. Dict.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Shakspeare.

YERK. n. f. [from the verb.] A quick motion.

TO YERN. v. a. See YEARN.

YES. adv. [gife, Saxon.]

1. A term of affirmation; the affirmative particle opposed to no.

Pray, Madam, are you married?—Yes. More.

2. It is a word of enforcement: even so;
not only so, but more.

This were a fit speech for a general in the head of an army, when going to battle: yes, and it is no less fit speech in the head of a council, upon a deliberation of entrance into a war. Bacon.

Yes, you despise the man to books confin'd,
Who from his study rails at human kind,
Though what he learns he speaks. Pope.

YEST. n. f. [geft, Saxon.]

1. The foam, spume, or flower of beer in fermentation; barm.

Yeast and outward means do fail,
And have no power to work on ale. Hudibras.

When drays bound high, then never crows behind,
Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind. Gay.

Y E T

2. The spume on troubled water; foam; froth.

Now the ship boring the moon with her main-mast, and anon swallowed with yeast and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hoghead. Shakspeare.

YE'STER. adj. [ghister, Dutch; hesternus, Latin.] Being next before the present day. It is not often used but in composition with another word, as day or night.

Love might as well be sow'd upon our sands,
As in a breast so barren:
To love an enemy, the only one Remaining too, whom yester sun beheld Must ring her charms. Dryden.

YE'STERDAY. n. s. [ȝȳrtaendæg, Saxon.] The day last past; the day next before to-day.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakspeare.

We are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow. Job.

You are both fluid, chang'd since yesterday;
Next day repairs but ill last day's decay;
Nor are, although the river keep the name,
Yesterday's waters and to-day's the same. Donne.

If yesterday could be recall'd again,
Ev'n now would I conclude my happy reign. Dryden.

Yesterday was set apart as a day of publick thanksgiving for the late extraordinary successes. Addison.

Mrs. Simper sends complaint in your yesterday's Spectator. Addison.

Naked from the womb
We yesterday came forth, and in the tomb
Naked again we must to-morrow lie;
Born to lament, to labour, and to die. Prior.

YE'STERDAY. adv. On the day last past.
Martius gave us yesterday a representation of the empire of the Turks, with no small vigour of words. Bacon.

YE'STERNIGHT. n. s. The night before this night.

YE'STERNIGHT. adv. On the night last past.

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over;
For yesternight by Catefby was it sent me. Shakspeare.

The distribution of this conference was made by Eupolis yesternight. Bacon.

YE'STY. adj. [from yest.] Frothy; spumy; foamy.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakspeare.

YET. conjunct. [ȝȳt, ȝet, ȝeta, Saxon.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; however.

They had a king was more than him before;
But yet a king, where they were nought the more. Daniel.

French laws forbid the female reign,
Yet love does them to slav'ry draw. Cowley.

Though such men have liv'd never so much upon the reserve, yet, if they be observed to have a particular fondness for persons noted for any sin, it is ten to one but there was a communication in the sin, before there was so in affection. South.

The heathens would never suffer their gods to be reviled, which yet were no gods; and shall it be allowed to any man to make a mock of him that made heaven and earth? Tillotson.

He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole tragedy; yet these imperfections being balanced by great virtues, they hinder not our compassion for his miseries. Dryden.

Let virtuoso's in five years be writ,
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit. Dryden.

YET. adv.

1. Beside; over and above.

This furnishes us with yet one more reason why our Saviour lays such a particular stress on acts of mercy. Atterbury.

Y E W

2. Still; the state still remaining the same.

They attest facts they had heard while they were yet heathens; and had they not found reason to believe them, they would still have continued heathens, and made no mention of them in their writings. Addison.

3. Once again.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night. Pope.

4. At this time; so soon; hitherto: with a negative before it.

Thales being asked when a man should marry, said, Young men, not yet; old men, not at all. Bacon.

5. At least; at all. Noting uncertainty or indeterminateness.

A man that would form a comparison betwixt Quintilian's declamations, if yet they be Quintilian's, and the orations of Tully, would be in danger of forfeiting his discretion. Baker.

6. It denotes continuance and extension, greater or smaller.

Shake not his hour-glass, when his hasty sand
Is ebbing to the last:
A little longer, yet a little longer,
And nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit without a winter storm. Dryden.

Yet a few days, and those which now appear
In youth and beauty like the blooming year,
In life's swift scene shall change. Dryden.

7. Still; in a new degree.

He that takes from a thief that which the thief took from an honest man, and keeps it to himself, is the wickedest thief of the two, by how much the rapine is made yet blacker by the pretence of piety and justice. L'Estrange.

8. Even; after all. A kind of emphatical addition to a negative.

If any man neglect his duty, his fault must not be ascribed to the rule appointed, neither yet to the whole church. Whitgift.

Men may not too rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor yet the evidence against them; for the witches themselves are imaginative, and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural occupations to witchcraft. Bacon.

Nor yet amidst this joy and brightest morn
Was absent, after all his mischief done,
The prince of darkness. Milton.

9. Hitherto: sometimes with as before it.

Hope beginning here, with a trembling expectation of things far removed, and as yet but only heard of, endeth with real and actual fruition of that which no tongue can express. Hooker.

YE'VEEN, for given.

Wants not a fourth grace to make the dance even?

Let that room to my lady be yeven;
She shall be a grace,
To fill the fourth place,
And reign with the rest in heaven. Spenser.

YEW. n. s. [ȝp, Saxon; yw, Welsh.] This is often written eugh; but the former orthography is at once nearer to the sound and the derivation. See EUGH.]

A tree of tough wood, used for bows, and therefore planted in churchyards.

It hath amentaceous flowers, which consist of many apices, for the most part shaped like a mushroom, and are barren; but the embryos, which are produced at remote distance on the same tree, do afterward become hollow bell-shaped berries, which are full of juice, and include seeds somewhat like acorns, having, as it were, a little cup to each. Miller.

The shooter eugh, the broad-leav'd sycamore,
The barren plantane, and the walnut sound;
The myrrhe, that her foul sin doth still deplore;
Alder, the owner of all waterish ground. Fairfax.

Slips of yew,
Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shakspeare.

He drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough yew. Dryden.

Y I E

The distinguish'd yew is ever seen Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.

YE'WEN. adj. [from yew.] Made of the wood of yew.

His stiff arms to stretch with eughen bow,
And manly legs still passing to and fro. Hubbard's Tale.

YEX. n. s. [See YUX.] The hiccough.

To YEX. v. n. To have the hiccough.

YEE'RE. adv. [ȝeene, Sax.] Together. Spenser.

To YIELD. v. a. [ȝelban, Sax. to pay.]

1. To produce; to give in return for cultivation or labour.

When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength. Genesis.

No country, for the bigness of it, can be better watered, or yield fairer fruits. Heylin.

Strabo tells us the mines at Carthage yielded the Romans per diem to the value of twenty-five thousand drachms, eight hundred and seven pounds five shillings and ten pence. Arbutnot.

2. To produce in general.

He makes milch kine yield blood. Shakspeare.

The wilderness yieldeth food for them. Job.

All the substances of an animal, fed even with acceffcent substances, yield by fire nothing but alkaline salts. Arbutnot.

3. To afford; to exhibit.

Philoclea would needs have her glove, and not without so mighty a lout as that face could yield. Sidney.

The mind of man desireth ever more to know the truth, according to the most infallible certainty which the nature of things can yield. Hooker.

If you take the idea of white, which one parcel of snow yielded yesterday to your sight, and another idea of white from another parcel of snow you see to-day, and put them together in your mind, they run into one, and the idea of whiteness is not at all increased. Locke.

4. To give, as claimed of right.

I the praise
Yield thee, so well thou hast this day purvey'd. Milton.

5. To allow; to concede.

I yield it just, said Adam, and submit. Milton.

I that have not only yielded, but challenged the undoubted truth of the proposition, can make no question of its corollaries. Hammond.

6. To permit; to grant.

Life is but air,
That yields a passage to the whistling sword,
And closes when 'tis gone. Dryden.

7. To emit; to expire.

Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast, and wand'ring air. Shakspeare.

He gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost. Genesis.

8. To resign; to give up: sometimes with a particle, as up or over.

He not yielding over to old age his country delights, especially of hawking, was, at that time following a merlin, brought to see this injury offered unto us. Sidney.

Thus I have yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory. Shakspeare.

She to realities yields all her shows. Milton.

'Tis the pride of man which is the spring of this evil, and an unwillingness to yield up their own opinions. Watts.

9. To surrender: sometimes with up.

The enemies sometimes offered unto the soldiers, upon the walls, great rewards, if they would yield up the city, and sometimes threatened them as fast. Kneller.

They laugh, as if to them I had quitted all,
At random yielded up to their misrule. Milton.

To YIELD. v. n.

1. To give up the contest; to submit.

He yields not in his fall;
But fighting dies, and dying kills withal. Daniel.

Y O K

All is not lost; immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield. Milton.
If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly yields to nature, and dies. Walton.

There he saw the fainting Grecians yield,
And here the trembling Trojans quit the field, Pursued by fierce Achilles. Dryden.

2. To comply with any person, or motive power.

Considering this present age so full of tongue, and weak of brain, behold we yield to the stream thereof. Hooker.

I see a yielding in the looks of France:
Mark, how they whisper. Shakspeare.

This supernatural soliciting, if ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success?
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth upfix my hair? Shakspeare.
With her much fair speech she caused him to yield. Proverbs.

The Jews have agreed to desire thee that thou wouldst bring down Paul; but do not thou yield unto them. Aët.

They shew the world that they are not of a yielding temper, which will be wronged or baffled. Kettlewell.

3. To comply with things required or enforced.

There could be no secure peace, except the Lace-demonians yielded to those things, which being granted, it would be no longer in their power to hurt the Athenians. Bacon.

If much converse Thee satiate, to short absence I could yield. Milt.

4. To concede; to admit; to allow; not to deny.

If we yield that there is a God, and that this God is almighty and just, it cannot be avoided but that, after this life ended, he administers justice unto men. Hakewill.

5. To give place, as inferiour in excellence or any other quality.

The fight of Achilles and Cygnus, and the fray betwixt the Lapithæ and Centaurs, yield to no other part of this poet. Dryden.

Tell me in what more happy fields
The thistle springs, to which the lily yields. Pope.

YIELDER. n. f. [from yield.] One who yields.

Briars and thorns at their apparel snatch,
Some sleeves, some hats; from yielders all things catch. Shakspeare.

Some guard these traitors to the block of death,
Treason's true bed, and yielder up of breath. Shakspeare.

YOKE. n. f. [geoc, Saxon; jock, Dutch; jugum, Latin; joug, French.]

1. The bandage placed on the neck of draught oxen.

Bring a red heifer, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke. Numbers.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

2. A mark of servitude; slavery.

Our country sinks beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds. Shakspeare.

In bands of iron fetter'd you shall be;
An easier yoke than what you put on me. Dryden.

3. A chain; a link; a bond.

This yoke of marriage from us both remove,
Where two are bound to draw, though neither love. Dryden.

4. A couple; two; a pair. It is used in the plural with the singular termination.

Those that accuse him in his intent towards our wives, are a yoke of his discarded men. Shakspeare.

His lands a hundred yoke of oxen till'd. Dryden.

A yoke of mules outgoes a yoke of oxen, when set to work at the same time; for mules are swifter. Broome.

To YOKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind by a yoke to a carriage.

This Stetes promised to do, if he alone would yoke together two brazen-hoofed bulls, and, plowing the ground, sow dragons teeth. L'Estrange.

Four milk-white bulls, the Thracian use of old,
Were yok'd to draw his car of burnish'd gold. Dryd.

Y O N

2. To join or couple with another.

My name
Be yok'd with his that did betray the best. Shakspeare.

Cassius, you are yok'd with a lamb,
That carries anger as the flint bears fire. Shakspeare.

Seek not in Latian bands to yoke
Our fair Lavinia. Dryden.

3. To enslave; to subdue.

These are the arms
With which he yoketh your rebellious necks, Razeth your cities. Shakspeare.

4. To restrain; to confine.

Men marry not; but chuse rather a libertine single life than to be yok'd in marriage. Bacon.

Xerxes, the liberty of Greece to yoke,
Over Hellespont bridg'd his way. Milton.

The words and promises, that yoke
The conqueror, are quickly broke. Hudibras.

YO'KE-ELM. n. f. [carpinus, Lat.] A tree.

Ainsworth.

YO'KEFELLOW. } n. f. [yoke and fellow,

YO'KEMATE. } or mate.]

1. Companion in labour.

Yokefellows in arms,
Let us to France. Shakspeare.

2. Mate; fellow: commonly partner in marriage.

You cannot think me fit
To be th' yokefellow of your wit,
Nor take one of so mean deserts
To be the partner of your parts. Hudibras.

Before Toulon thy yokemate lies,
Where all the live-long night he sighs. Stepney.

Those who have most distinguished themselves by railing at the sex, very often chuse one of the most worthless for a companion and yokefellow. Spectator.

YOLD, for yielded. Obsolete. Spenser.

YOLK. n. f. [See YELK.] The yellow part of an egg.

Nature hath provided a large yolk in every egg, a great part whereof remaineth after the chicken is hatched; and, by a channel made on purpose, serves instead of milk to nourish the chick for a considerable time. Ray.

YON. } adj. [geond, Sax.] Being at YOND. } a distance within view.

YO'NDER. }

Madam, yond young fellow swears he will speak with you. Shakspeare.

Good mother, do not marry me to yon fool. Shakspeare.

Would you not laugh to meet a great counsellor of state in a flat cap, his gloves under his girdle;
and yond haberdasher in a velvet gown furred with sables? Ben Jonson.

Tigranes, being encamped upon a hill with four hundred thousand men, discovered the army of the Romans, being not above fourteen thousand, marching towards him: he made himself merry with it, and said, yonder men are too many for an ambas-sage, and too few for a fight. Bacon.

For proof look up,
And read thy lot in yon celestial sign. Milton.

Yon flow'ry arbors, yonder allies green. Milton.

Let other swains attend the rural care,
But nigh yon mountain let me tune my lays. Pope.

Then hear me, gracious heav'n, and grant my pray'r,
Make yonder man the fav'rite of thy care:
Nourish the plant with thy celestial dew,
Like manna let it fall, and still be new. Harte.

If I were to fall down yonder precipice, and break my neck, I should be no more a man of this world. Beattie.

YON. } adv. At a distance within

YOND. } view. It is used when we

YO'NDER. } direct the eye from another thing to the object.

The fringed curtains of thine eyes advance,
And say what thou see'st yond. Shakspeare.

First, and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon soars on golden wing,
Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne,
The cherub Contemplation. Milton.

Yonder are two apple-women scolding. Arbutnot and Pope.

Y O U

YOND. adj. [I know not whence derived.]

Mad; furious: perhaps transported with rage; under alienation of mind, in which sense it concurs with the rest.

Then like a lion, which hath long time sought
His robbed whelps, and at the last them found Amongst the shepherd swains, then waxeth wood and yond;

So fierce he laid about him. Spenser.

Nor those three brethren, Lombards, fierce and yond. Fairfax.

YORE or Of Yore. adv. [geogana, Saxon.]

1. Long.

Witness the burning altars, which he swore,
And, guilty, heavens of his bold perjury;
Which, though he hath polluted oft and yore,
Yet I to them for judgment just do fly. Spenser.

2. Of old time; long ago: with of be-fore it.

And seated here a sec, his bishoprick of yore,
Upon the farthest point of this unfruitful shore. Drayton.

Three bright-eyed Vesta long of yore
To solitary Saturn bore. Milton.

There liv'd, as authors tell, in days of yore,
A widow somewhat old, and very poor. Dryden.

In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd;
Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd. Prior.

The devil was piqued such saintship to be behold,
And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old;
But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
And tempts by making rich, not making poor. Pope.

You. pron. [eop, iuh, Saxon; of ge, ye.]

1. The oblique case of ye.

Ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you ward. Ephesians.

I thought to show you
How easy 'twas to die, by my example,
And hanfel fate before you. Dryden.

2. It is used in the nominative, in common language, when the address is to per-sons; and though first introduced by corruption, is now established. In the following lines you and ye are used un-grammatically in the places of each other; but even this use is customary.

What gain you by forbidding it to tease ye?
It now can neither trouble ye nor please ye. Dryd.

3. It is the ceremonial word for the second person singular, and is always used, ex-cept in solemn language.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over. Prior.

But, madam, if the fates withstand, and you Are destin'd Hymen's willing victim too. Pope.

4. It is used indefinitely, as the French on; any one; whosoever.

We passed by what was one of those rivers of burning matter: this looks, at a distance, like a new-plowed land; but as you come near it, you see nothing but a long heap of heavy disjointed clods. Addison.

5. You is used in the subsequent members of a sentence, as distinguished from ye.

Stand forth, ye champions, who the gauntlet wield,
Or you the swiftest racers of the field. Pope.

YOUNG. adj. [iong, yeong, Sax. jong, Dutch.]

1. Being in the first part of life; not old: used of animal life.

Guests should be interlarded, after the Persian custom, by ages young and old. Carew.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims. Shakspeare.

I firmly am resolv'd
Not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakspeare.

Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes. Shakspeare.

YOU

He ordain'd a lady for his prize, Generally praiseful, fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. Chapman.
In timorous deer he hantels his young paws,
And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws. Cowley.

Nor need'st thou by thy daughter to be told,
Though now thy spry blood with age be cold,
Thou hast been young. Dryden.

When we say a man is young, we mean that his age is yet but a small part of that which usually men attain to: and when we denominate him old, we mean that his duration is run out almost to the end of that which men do not usually exceed. Locke.

It will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion, by God's ordination, belonged to the eldest son; because Jacob the youngest here had it. Locke.

From earth they rear him struggling now with death,
And Nestor's youngest stops the vents of breath. Pope.

2. Ignorant; weak.

Come, elder brother, thou art too young in this. Shakspeare.

3. It is sometimes applied to vegetable life.

There be trees that bear best when they begin to be old; as almonds; the cause is, for that all trees that bear must have an oily fruit; and young trees have a more watry juice, and less concocted. Bacon.

YOUNG. n. f. The offspring of animals collectively.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakspeare.

So many days my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks ere the poor fools will year. Shakspeare.

The eggs disclos'd their callow young. Milton.

The reason why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is because there might be more plenty. More.

Not so her young; for their unequal line
Was heroes make, half human, half divine;
Their earthly mold obnoxious was to fate,
Th' immortal part assum'd immortal state. Dryden.

Those insects, for whose young nature hath not made provision of sufficient sustenance, do themselves gather and lay up in store for them. Ray.

YOUNGISH. adj. [from young.] Somewhat young.

She let her second room to a very genteel youngish
man. Tatler.

YOUNGLING. n. f. [from young; yeong-ling, Sax.] Any creature in the first part of life.

More dear unto their God than younglings to their dam. Fairy Queen.

Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I.

—Grey-beard, thy love doth freeze. Shakspeare.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown.

Encourag'd thus, she brought her younglings nigh. Dryden.

The stately beast the two Tyrrheidæ bred,
Snatch'd from his dam, and the tame youngling fed. Dryden.

YOUNGLY. adv. [from young.]

1. Early in life.

Say we read lectures to you,
How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued, and what stock he springs of. Shakspeare.

2. Ignorantly; weakly.

YOUNGSTER. } n. f. [from young.] A

YOUNKER. } young person: in contempt.

What, will you make a younker of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall so have my pocket pick'd? Shakspeare.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun:
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trim'd like a younker prancing to his love. Shakspeare.

While Ulysses slept there, and close by

The other younkers, he abroad would ly. Chapman.

Fame tells, by age fame reverend grown,
That Phœbus gave his chariot to his son;

YOU

And whilst the youngster from the path declines, Admiring the strange beauty of the signs,
Proud of his charge, he drove the fiery horse,
And would outdo his father in his course. Creech.

The youngster, who at nine and three Drinks with his sisters milk and tea,
From breakfast reads, till twelve o'clock,
Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes and Locke. Prior.

YOUNGTH. n. f. [from young.] Youth. Obsolete.

The mournful muse in mirth now list ne mask,
As she was wont in youngth and summer days. Spenser.

YOUR. pronoun. [eopen, Saxon.]

1. Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak to more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.

Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized by a trifle. Shakspeare.

Impute your danger to our ignorance;
The bravest men are subject most to chance. Dryd.

Ye dauntless Dardans hear,
Think on the strength which once your fathers bore. Pope.

2. Your is used in an indeterminate sense.

Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; so every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakspeare.

There is a great affinity between coins and poetry, and your medallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison.

A disagreement between these seldom happens,
but among your antiquaries and schoolmen. Fenton.

3. Yours is used when the substantive goes before or is understood: as, this is your book, this book is yours.

Pray for this man and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakspeare.

That done, our day of marriage shall be yours,
One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shakspeare.

This kiss, if it durst speak,
Would stretch thy spirits up into the air:
Conceive and fare thee well. —

—Yours in the ranks of death. Shakspeare.

He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east. Shakspeare.

While the sword this monarchy secures,
'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.

My wealth, my city, and myself are yours. Dryd.

It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.

YOURSE'LF. n. f. [your and self.]

1. You, even you; ye, not others.

If it stand, as you yourself still do,
Within the eye of honour; be assur'd,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakspeare.

O heav'ns!

If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
Make it your cause. Shakspeare.

2. In the oblique cases it has the sense of reciprocation, or reference to the same subject mentioned before: as, you love only yourself; you have betrayed yourselves by your rashness.

Whenever you are more intent upon adorning your persons than upon perfecting of your souls, you are much more beside yourselves than he that had rather a laced coat than a healthful body. Law.

3. It is sometimes reciprocal in the nominative.

Be but yourselves. Pope.

YOUTH. n. f. [yeoguth, Saxon.]

1. The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty-eight.

But could youth last, and love still breed,
Had joys no date, and age no need;

YUX

Then these delights my mind might move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.

His starry helm unbuckled show'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ead. Milton.

The solidity, quantity, and strength of the aliment, is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Arbutnot.

2. A young man.

Siward's son,
And many unrough youths even now,
Protect their first of manhood. Shakspeare.

If this were seen,
The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
What perils past, what crosses do ensue,
Would shut the book and sit him down and die. Shakspeare.

O'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd
Androgeo's death, and off'rings to his ghost;
Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet
The fate appointed by revengeful Crete. Dryden.

The pious chief
A hundred youths from all his train elects,
And to the Latian court their course direct. Dryd.

3. Young men. Collectively.

As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the openest and clearest; as Livy before Sallust, Sidney before Donne. Ben Jonson.

About him exercis'd heroic games
Th' unarmed youth of heav'n. Milton.

The graces put not more exactly on
Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won,
Than that young beauty by thy care is dress'd,
When all your youth prefers her to the rest. Waller.

YOUTHFUL. adj. [youth and full.]

1. Young.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd they took their course,
East, west, north, south. Shakspeare.

There, in a heap of slain, among the rest,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load opprest
Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.

2. Suitable to the first part of life.

Here be all the pleasures
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
Brisk as the April buds in primrose season. Milton.

In his years were seen
A youthful vigour and autumnal green. Dryden.

The nymph surveys him, and beholds the grace
Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pept.

3. Vigorous, as in youth.

How is a good christian animated by a steadfast belief of an everlasting enjoyment of perfect felicity, such as, after millions of millions of age, is still youthful and flourishing, and inviting as at the first! no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity. Bentley.

YOUTHFULLY. adv. [from youthful.] In a youthful manner.

YOUTHLY. adj. [from youth.] Young; early in life. Obsolete.

True be thy words, and worthy of thy praise,
That warlike feats dost highest glorify,
Therein have I spent all my youthly days,
And many battles fought, and many frays. Spenser.

YOUTHY. adj. [from youth.] Young; youthful. A bad word.

The scribbler had not genius to turn my age, as indeed I am an old maid, into raillery, for affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of day. Spekator.

YPIGHT. part. [y and pight, from pitch.]

Fixed,
That same wicked wight
His dwelling has low in an hollow cave,
Far underneath a craggy chift ypight,
Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spenser.

YUCK. n. f. [jucken, Dutch.] Itch.

YULE. n. f. [geol, yeol, yehul, Saxon.]

The time of Christmas.

YUX. n. f. [yeox, Saxon; sometimes pronounced yex.] The hiccough.

Z

Z E A

Z Is found in the Saxon alphabets set down by grammarians, but is read in no word originally Teutonic: its sound is uniformly that of a hard s. No word of English original begins with z.

ZA'FFAR. } n. f.
ZA'FFIR. }

Powder the calx of cobalt fine, and mix it with three times its weight of powdered flints; this being wetted with common water, concretes into a mass called zaffre, which from its hardness has been mistaken for a native mineral. Hill.

Cobalt being sublimed, the flowers are of a blue colour; these German mineralists called zaffir. Woodward.

The artificers in glass tinge their glass blue with that dark mineral zaphra. Boyle.

ZA'NY. n. f. [Probably of zavei, the contraction of Giovanni: from sanna, a scoff, according to Skinner.] One employed to raise laughter by his gestures, actions, and speeches; a merry Andrew; a buffoon.

Some carrytale, some pleafeman, some slight zany, Some mumblenews, some trencher knight, some Dick,

Told our intents before. Shakspeare.

Then write that I may follow, and so be Thy echo, thy debtor, thy foil, thy zany, I shall be thought, if mine like thine I shape, All the world's lion, though I be thy ape. Donne.

Oh, great restorer of the good old stage, Preacher at once, and zany, of thy age. Pope.

ZA'RNICH. n. f. A substance in which orpiment is found; it approaches to the nature of orpiment, but without its lustre and foliated texture. The common kinds of zarnich are green and yellow. Hill.

ZEAL. n. f. [ζῆλος; zelus, Lat.] Passionate ardour for any person or cause.

In this present age, wherein zeal hath drowned charity and skill, meekness will not now suffer any man to marvel, whatsoever he shall hear reproved by whomsoever. Hooker.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor show doth better; this doth infer the zeal I had to see him. Shakspeare.

O Cromwell, Cromwell!

Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakspeare.

The bare fervour and zeal is taken in commutation for much other piety, by many the most eager contenders. Hammond.

Among the seraphims

Abdiel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd The Deity, and divine commands obey'd, Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe, The current of his fury thus oppos'd. Milton.

Had zeal anciently armed itself against sovereignty, we had never heard of a calendar of saints. Holyday.

We must look our prayers be with zeal and earnestness: it is not enough that we so far attend them, as barely to know what it is we say, but we must put forth all the affection and devotion of our souls. Duty of Man.

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will. Dryden.

She with such a zeal the cause embrac'd, As women, where they will, are all in haste; The father, mother, and the kin beside, Were overborne by the fury of the tide. Dryden.
The princes applaud with a furious joy, And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.

Seriousness and zeal in religion is natural to the English. Tillotson.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety by overacting some things in their religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotson.

True zeal seems not to be any one single affection of the soul, but rather a strong mixture of many holy affections; rather a gracious constitution of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, swaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions; all not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent. Sprat.

When the sins of a nation have provoked God to forsake it, he suffers those to concur in the most pernicious counsels for enslaving conscience, who pretend to the greatest zeal for the liberty of it. Stillington.

This rebellion has discovered to his majesty, who have espoused his interests with zeal or indifference. Addison.

A scorn of flattery and a zeal for truth. Pope.

There is nothing noble in a clergyman but burning zeal for the salvation of souls; nor any thing poor in his profession, but idleness and worldly spirit. Larv.

ZEALOT. n. f. [zeleoteur, Fr. ζηλωτης.] One passionately ardent in any cause. Generally used in dispraise.

But now, whereas these zealots complain of us for partaking with the Roman church in things lawful and good, they themselves comply with the same in articles and actions which are of no good quality. White.

The fury of zealots, intestine bitterness and division, were the greatest occasion of the destruction of Jerusalem. King Charles.

Are not those men too often the greatest zealots, who are most notoriously ignorant? true zeal should always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unwearied passion, for what it once knows to be worthy of such passion. Sprat.

No wonder that so many of these deluded zealots have been engaged in a cause which they at first abhorred, and have wished or acted for the success of an enterprize, that might have ended in the extirpation of the protestant religion. Addison.

ZEALOUS. adj. [from zeal.] Ardently passionate in any cause.

Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we act our temporal affairs with a desire no greater than our necessity, and in actions of religion we be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Taylor.

This day, at height of noon, came to my sphere A spirit zealous, as he seem'd, to know More of the Almighty's works. Milton.

We should be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of those snares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive. Decay of Piety.

It is not at all good to be zealous against any person, but only against their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for persons; but then it should be only for good things: a rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for ill things, all manner of zeal for little things. Sprat.

Z E A

Z E U

Being instructed only in the general, and zealous in the main design; and as finite beings not admitted into the secrets of government, the last resorts of providence, or capable of discovering the final purposes of God, they must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends in which alone they can oppose each other. Dryden.

Being thus saved himself, he may be zealous in the salvation of souls. Larv.

ZEALOUSLY. adv. [from zealous.] With passionate ardour.

Thy care is fixt, and zealously attends, To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light, And hope that reaps not shame. Milton.

To enter into a party as into an order of friars, with so resigned an obedience to superiors, is very unsuitable with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously assert. Swift.

ZEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from zealous.] The quality of being zealous.

ZE'CHIN. n. f. [from Zecba, a place in Venice, where the mint is settled for coinage.] A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

ZE'DOARY. n. f. [zedoaire, Fr.] A spicy plant, somewhat like ginger in its leaves, but of a sweet scent.

ZED. n. f. The name of the letter z. Thou whoreson zed, thou unnecessary letter. Shakspeare.

ZE'NITH. n. f. [Arabick.] The point over head opposite to the nadir.

Fond men! if we believe that men do live Under the zenith of both frozen poles, Though none come thence advertisement to give, Why bear we not the like faith of our souls? Davies.
These seasons are designed by the motions of the sun; when that approaches nearest our zenith, or vertical point, we call it summer. Brown.

ZE'PHYR. } n. f. [zephyrus, Lat.] The ZE'PHYRUS. } west wind; and, poeti-cally, any calm soft wind.

They are as gentle

As zephyrs blowing below the violet. Shakspeare.

Zephyr you shall see a youth with a merry countenance, holding in his hand a swan with wings displayed, as about to sing. Peacham.

Forth rush the levant and the ponent winds, Eurus and Zephyr. Milton.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes. Milt.

ZEST. n. f.

1. The peel of an orange squeezed into wine.

2. A relish; a taste added.

Almighty vanity! to thee they owe Their zest of pleasure, and their balm of woe. Young.

To ZEST. v. a. To heighten by an additional relish.

ZETE'TICK. adj. [from ζητεω.] Proceeding by inquiry.

ZE'UGMA. n. f. [from ζευγμα.] A figure in grammar when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplement; as, Iulius overcame shame, boldness fear, and madness reason.

Z O N

Zo'CLE. n. f. [In architecture.] A small sort of stand or pedestal, being a low square piece or member, serving to support a busto, statue, or the like, that needs to be raised; also a low square member serving to support a column instead of a pedestal, base, or plinth. Diæ.

Zo'DIACK. n. f. [zodiaque, Fr. ζωδιακός, in τῶν ζώων, the living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it in globes.]

1. The track of the sun through the twelve signs; a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.

The golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his glitt'ring coach. Shaksp.

Years he number'd scarce thirteen,

When fates turn'd cruel:

Yet three fill'd zodiacks had he been

The stage's jewel. Ben Jonson.

It exceeds even their absurdity to suppose the zodiack and planets to be efficient of, and antecedent to, themselves, or to exert any influences before they were in being. Bentley.

Here in a shrine, that cast a dazzling light,
Sat fixt in thought the mighty Stagyrite;
His sacred head a radiant zodiack crown'd,
And various animals his sides surround. Pope.

2. It is used by Milton for a girdle.

By his side,

As in a glitt'ring zodiack, hung the sword,
Satan's dire dread; and in his hand the spear. Milton.

ZONE. n. f. [ζώνη; zona, Latin.]

1. A girdle.

The middle part

Girt like a starry zone his waist, and round

Z O O

Skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold,
And colours dipp'd in heaven. Milton.

An embroider'd zone surrounds her waist. Dryd.

Thy statue, Venus, though by Phidias' hands

Design'd immortal, yet no longer stands;

The magick of thy shining zone is past,

But Salisbury's garter shall for ever last. Granville.

Scarce could the goddess from her nymphs be known,

But by the crescent and the golden zone. Pope.

2. A division of the earth.

The whole surface of the earth is divided into five zones: the first is contained between the two tropicks, and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the arctick polar circle: the southern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumscribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centers.

True love is still the same: the torrid zones,

And those more frigid ones,

It must not know:

For love grown cold or hot,

Is lust or friendship, not

The thing we show:

For that's a flame would die,

Held down or up too high:

Then think I love more than I can express,

And would love more, could I but love the less. Suckling.

And as five zones th' etherial regions bind,

Five correspondent are to earth assign'd:

The sun, with rays directly darting down,

Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone. Dryd.

3. Circuit; circumference.

Scarce the sun

Hath finish'd half his journey, and scarce begins

His other half in the great zone of heaven. Milton.

ZOO'GRAPHER. n. f. [ζῷον and γράφω.]

Z O O

One who describes the nature, properties, and forms of animals.

One kind of locust stands not prone, or a little inclining upward; but in a large erectness, elevating the two fore legs, and sustaining itself in the middle of the other four, by zoographers called the prophet and praying locust. Brown.

ZOO'GRAPHY. [of ζῷον and γράφω.] A description of the forms, natures, and properties of animals.

If we contemplate the end, its principal final cause being the glory of its Maker, this leads us into divinity; and for its subordinate, as it is designed for alimental sustenance to living creatures, and medicinal uses to man, we are thereby conducted into zoography. Glanville.

ZOO'LOGY. n. f. [of ζῷον and λογία.] A treatise concerning living creatures.

ZO'OPHYTE. n. f. [ζῳοφυτον, of ζῳον and φυτον.] Certain vegetables or substances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.

ZOO'PHORICK Column. n. f. [In architecture.] A statuary column, or a column which bears or supports the figure of an animal. Diæ.

ZOO'PHORUS. n. f. [ζῳοφορός.] A part between the architraves and cornice, so called on account of the ornaments carved on it, among which were the figures of animals. Diæ.

ZOO'TOMIST. n. f. [of ζωτομία.] A dissector of the bodies of brute beasts.

ZOO'TOMY. n. f. [ζωτομία, of ζῳον and τεμνω.] Dissection of the bodies of beasts.
